SCOOPER SIZE IT

JP LICKS' ANNUAL roster of Red Sox flavors has arrived, and Youk's Manischewitz Sorbet sounds the catchiest (Papelbon Pineapple is a close second). Founder Vincent Petryk, 55, thinks the Brownie Brownie Beckett will be the biggest seller. "A lot of these flavors are made from my favorite ingredients: brownies, rice pudding, noodle kugel," says Petryk, who still concocts most of the recipes. Of course, in the case of Manischewitz, there's the problem of chemistry. "Alcohol suppresses the freezing point."

Pig Out

When Charles Kelsey dreamt up his sandwich shop, a headlining item was a classic Philly sub: thin-shaved pork sharpened with wilted broccoli rabe and provolone. The sandwich is a Saturday-only special, packing shoulder-roast slices into a sesame-seed bun. It comes in two must-try iterations: Philly-style or layered with roasted garlic, pickled fennel and a dash of salt.

Going Out

Hot Stove

Upon walking into the hangar housing Jerry Remy's Sports Bar & Grill, your eyes are tractor-beamed toward the 11 x 6.5-foot TVs hanging like twin planets, orbited by flat-screens and trailed by a cloud of high-definition extending all the way into the bathrooms. You get the impression that this is a quintessential, mass-market sports tavern. But then there's Mel Tormé on the speakers and towering open windows facing Fenway's first base line. You begin to see something unique.

A look at the menu holds no surprises. Consulting and acting executive chef Todd Hall scoured dozens of sports bars and calculated the best sellers—hence a lineup of nachos, sliders and the inevitable RemDawg. Still, there's BBQ from a $10K, custom-built smoker served with a latticed chip-ring stuffed with garlic smashed potatoes. "We're not taking an ice cream scoop of cole slaw and slopping it on the plate," Hall says. There's also the Remy Burger ($10)—Angus, white cheddar and grilled onions sandwiched between fried dough—but it's more Hall's indulgence than a favorite of the former second baseman. "It's what I make when my girlfriend's out," he confides. "If I got caught, I'd be dead."

The sole shocker is the prospect of season tickets, where $250–$500 gets you a guaranteed seat at the restaurant to watch the local pro team of your choice, along with other perks like a free beer and front-of-line privileges. Seat licenses, recently popularized by the Yankees, do have a whiff of New York elitism. But like the idea of winning world championships, hometown fans will probably get used to it.

HELLO, RAFIKI

Dining with an agenda

RAFIKI BISTRO, opening at the end of March in the former Forest Café space, looks to be quintessentially Cantabridgian: a bistro with "an agenda," according to co-owner Dan Goldstein.

Sure, it's a restaurant designed to "morph the way a bistro does in Paris," from breakfast through late-night dining. But it's also "a business that reflects our values," says Goldstein. "My partner (Jack Kutner) and I run the Clear Conscience Café, dedicated to environmentalism and social responsibility," housed inside a food co-op in Central Square.

Expect all-natural, mostly organic ingredients, menu items ranging from morning croissants to elegant entrées and "reasonable prices." As for the name, it's "part of a Swahili greeting that means 'hello, friend.'"

ALTHOUGH SOME DETAILS are yet to be finalized—like the menu—when it comes to the big picture, Towne Stove and Spirits will be a big deal. With three separate dining areas accommodating 300 people, three bars, a full liquor license and an 80-seat seasonal patio, this project from the Lyons Group is set to make a splash when it opens in June at the Hynes Convention Center.

BACK IN CAMBRIDGE, the soon-to-open Russell House Tavern has an impressive trio behind it: general manager Ian Grossman, formerly of Sel de la Terre in Natick and Quince Bistro in Needham (where he was executive chef); bar manager Aaron Butler, formerly of Drink; and executive chef Michael Scelfo, who'll retain the same title at Temple Bar. From the Grafton Group, this sizeable restaurant—two floors, two bars, a lounge and a patio—will feature "seasonally-changing, classic American fare with contemporary influences" and an exclusively American wine list.

REV UP your credit card: The two menu options at Barbara Lynch's Menton, which opens on April 3, will run $95 (four-course prix fixe) or $145 (chef's tasting).

Drink of the Moment

Heritage Happy Hour

While The Savoy Cocktail Book is bartending's Joy of Cooking, Ted Haigh's Vintage Spirits and Forgotten Cocktails reads more like mythology. Within its pages roam drinks like the Alamagoozlum, a formidable creature birthed from the mind of JP Morgan.

History lessons can be had at Lineage, where every Friday and Saturday bar manager Ryan Lotz presents two cocktails from Haigh's text. Choices depend on the weather, whether an ingredient is fresh, or as in this week's case, there's a chance to present an intriguing spectrum.

On the lighter side, Lotz offers SEVENTH HEAVEN ($5, small; $10, full), a cousin to the Aviation and Hemingway Daiquiri incorporating gin, maraschino liqueur and grapefruit. "This is a more bracing daiquiri," he says. "It gets your palate going, but it's not going to knock it out."

For the uppercut, he turns to the text's darker pages. "It allows for three things that are familiar and one ingredient they've never heard of," Lotz explains. "And it affords me plenty of opportunity to cocktail-nerd out."

Things don't get geekier than the citrus, smoke and anise elixir called the MODERNISTA ($5, $10). Known as the Modern Cocktail pre-Prohibition, it contains Scotch, Jamaican rum, absinthe, lemon, orange bitters and Swedish Punsch—an ingredient not yet legal in the States, so it's house-made with Batavia Arrack, itself just recently available (much like the absinthe).

"Boston has a great cocktail scene," Lotz says. "People aren't afraid to try something different and learn something every time."

Top 10 Reasons
WHY THE REM DAWG THINKS YOU SHOULD BUY FROM LEXUS OF WATERTOWN

10. The sandwiches in the customer lounge are better than the hot dogs at Fenway. And they're free.

9. I drive a Lexus and I finished just 755 career home runs behind Barry Bonds.

8. There are no rain delays because all their inventory is indoors.

7. I stole more bases than all the other car dealer spokespersons combined.

6. They refer to Lexus coupes and sedans as 2 seamers and 4 seamers.

5. They have the best front row seats (in their cars, of course!)

4. I've already been President of Red Sox Nation. I am now campaigning for President of Lexus Nation.

3. Bill James once rated me as only the 100th greatest second baseman of all time. Bill James does not drive a Lexus, so what does he know.

2. J.D. Power has named Lexus the most reliable brand in the U.S. fourteen times. I made the All-Star Team once.

1. The sales people at Lexus of Watertown are so professional, they will sell you a Lexus even if you are a Yankees fan. They will grind their teeth, but they will sell it to you.

Trina's Recipes

Honey Mustard

1 cup Dijon mustard
1/2 cup mayonnaise
1/2 cup honey
1/2 teaspoon salt

Mix all ingredients in a bowl.

Spicy Jalapeño Ketchup

This condiment kicks everything up about 10 notches. Add Sriracha to taste if you like things really hot.

3 cups ketchup
1/4 cup canned jalapeño peppers, plus 2 tablespoons juice reserved
1 teaspoon green pepper sauce

Mix all ingredients in a bowl. Season to taste.

Dijon-Caper Relish

To balance the tang of the sauce, serve this relish on a bacon-wrapped hot dog.

1 cup capers, chopped
1/2 red onion, diced small
1/4 cup Dijon mustard
1 tablespoon honey
1 tablespoon white wine vinegar
Pinch of salt

Mix all ingredients together in a bowl. Season to taste.

Beauty

Sugar and Spice

Outside the dinner table, pepper gets a bad rap. Between its sneeze-inducing properties and its ability to ward off assailants, the spice isn't thought of as a beauty enhancer. Yet pepper's actually a natural rejuvenator and energizer. These three products all contain a small dash and smell as great as they feel.

TREASURE HUNT

The mystery surrounding an ancient manuscript

WILL PIPER, FORMER FBI agent of the earlier Secret of the Seventh Son, is a curious guy, in both senses of the word. A cad, a drinker and a bad ex-husband, he's supposedly chastened in his new marriage and fatherhood. But the return of a thrilling case involving an ultra-secret government installation in Nevada, where an ancient library is buried, lures him out of retirement. One particular book has enticingly escaped from that literary tomb, and a London auction puts it into Will's hands. Dated 1527, the book ominously alludes to 9, Feb. 2027—then very distant, now very near. Predictions made way back when eerily foretell the deaths of people living today.

Book of Souls
by Glenn Cooper

Cooper lives in Wayland, Mass.

Author Glenn Cooper's prose roams across centuries. In the modern-thriller era, Cooper delivers the arid language of "downloads" and "databases" with some hip snarkiness. Then in the premodern parts, he makes the luscious antique words and sensibilities of monks, Nostradamus and Shakespeare blossom forth from discovered manuscripts. The most compelling section takes place at Cantwell Hall, where the auctioned book originated. Still-naughty Will connects with Isabelle, granddaughter of that stately home's owner, and amid, yes, sex and drinking, they follow clues hidden behind tiles in musty, scary nooks, revealing secrets and treasures. ×××

FROM PAGE 159: "A melancholy was descending. He was tired, he was disappointed that he was getting his old cravings back. The bottle of scotch was still up in his room. As his mind wandered, so did his eyes. One of the blue-and-white Delft tiles lining the fireplace caught his eye. It was a charming scene of a mother walking through a field with a bundle of twigs under one arm and her toddler son on the other. She looked perfectly happy. She probably wasn't married to a bastard like him, he thought."

A REAL DRAG

There's a sucker born every minute.

IDEAS GOOD IN THEORY: strip clubs, socialism, pizza bagels. In practice, these things never live up to their imagined potential. For the moment, breathable food can be added to the list.

Le Whif is an invention from Harvard biomedical engineering professor David Edwards. As the founder of both LaboGroup and the Foodlab at Le Laboratoire in Paris, Edwards and his team have created inventions like Andrea, an air purification system using houseplants; the Pumpkin, a specialized container to aid water transportation in the developing world; and a cylinder of inhalable chocolate, named after an effete, Pink Panther villain.

The idea behind Le Whif is to provide chocolate without the calories. Each ChapStick-shaped inhaler contains eight to 10 puffs. A quick drag covers your taste-buds with an organic chocolate cloud. Not a chocoholic but a product tester with an oral fixation, I grabbed handfuls of all three flavors and handed them out to coworkers and friends for a week of experimentation.

Swing and Le Whif

The most common response upon encountering Le Whif is one of confusion. "It looks like some drug," said Amanda, our assistant editor. "If you saw me doing this, you'd be like, that girl's fed up." Giving her a raspberry Whif and a tutorial only increased the unease. Pull out this. Suck on that. It was all very Fast Times at Ridgemont High.

The best response to the first hit came from our intern Tom. After a burst of mint chocolate, his eyes shot open like he'd been goosed. As his blush faded, he managed a weak, "It kinda tastes like chocolate."

For me, that was the problem. I found the taste weak. Yet at the same time, while the granules are too big to enter the lungs, each pull felt like I was battering my uvula and tonsils with a blustery Nestlé gale. Nearly all my huffs were followed by coughs. Either I possess the lung power of a bottlenose dolphin, or, despite years of practice, I was screwing up the process of breathing.

"It takes some time to learn the technique," said LaboGroup COO Tom Hadfield. "We equate it to learning how to use chopsticks." (For the record, I can't use chopsticks without getting hand cramps and soy sauce on my shirt.) Calling from London and masking his pity behind an English accent, Hadfield explained that enjoying Le Whif requires just "a gentle kiss." This is a hard concept to follow when candy is involved. If the tubes had cargo-bay doors, I would've dumped their payloads into my mouth like I was fighting an oral forest fire.

That technique would've flown in the face of Le Whif's primary selling point. Besides offering portability, Hadfield claims that the product provides efficient consumption. Consider that one Hershey's Kiss contains 200 calories, and while it delivers taste, only a few grams of all that fat and sugar is actually coating your tongue. With Le Whif, a soft blanketing of flavor nets you less than a single calorie.

"Yeah, but chocolate melts in your mouth," contended my friend Derek, after an unenthusiastic toke. And surely, the sensuousness of eating is absent. Le Whif would also be hard-pressed to win my girlfriend's $2.50. "If there was some other thing to it besides the chalky chocolate, maybe. It needs some kind of bonus."

Ahead of the game, the FoodLab has created coffee Le Whif, with each tube containing the caffeine equivalent of a shot of espresso. Already in demand after a limited run, I couldn't get my hands on any, which may be good, because as a caffeine junkie, it's possible my mouth isn't the only orifice I would have used to ingest it.

"We're working on new flavors," Hadfield assured. "In the future, it's conceivable you could breathe almost any food, so maybe you'll be breathing a three-course meal."

But there's competition in the cutthroat world of aerosol science. Hometown rival Compellis Pharmaceuticals is now working on a nasal spray designed to curb the appetite by temporarily altering one's sense of smell.

Faced with a tube packed with powdered au poivre, I might not need the help. ✖✖✖

TRAFFIC JAMS

TOO COLD ON THE CURB: I'm glad you had the opportunity "to thank me for the traffic lesson." And I'm sorry I felt "compelled to open my mouth" about your "violation" of an "oft-overlooked traffic law." I had a green light, you had a do not cross! And what did you decide to do? Cross anyway, and then get upset with me for driving through a green light! I know I have it so easy driving up Boylston Street on a weekday afternoon at 5:15 after commuting back to the city for an hour to get home to my sick wife and nine-month-old daughter. So I will "pardon you for being reluctant to stand on the corner and wait for the signal." Frustrated behind the wheel

To the Monday morning multitasker: Thank you for your attempt to make me take stock of my life. As I crossed Brookline Avenue, I turned to see you (with ample dexterity) driving your gleaming white, late model SUV. You drove with not two, not one, but (look, mom!) no hands. How was this accomplished? With your elbow! And why? You were multitasking [with] your cell phone in one hand and your eyelash curler in the other, craning your neck towards the rearview mirror to make certain you did a perfect job. And that swerve at the last minute to avoid me? Perfection. It allowed me not only to survive, but to review in detail the 32 years of my life that flashed so vividly before my eyes. Enlightened pedestrian

To the woman jogger in Coolidge Corner on March 6: You were approaching a woman and her two kids from behind and nearly ran them over. Then you had the gall to yell at her to watch her kids. You were out of line. You were jogging on the sidewalk in a very congested area. If you don't want to be bothered when you're running, hit the track. Grow up and learn to behave. Offended mother and runner

Dining { ERIN BYERS MURRAY AND MAX TOSTE }

GEEKING OUT

Lord Hobo puts beer front and center.

MEAT AND GREET A charcuterie plate, fried oysters and an Italian ale

YOU KNOW YOU'RE SITTING with a beer geek when a brew is lauded as "slammin'," "bangin'," or filled with "Green Flash nastiness."

I heard these descriptions during a dinner with Max Toste, co-owner of Allston's Deep Ellum. We ate at Lord Hobo, Cambridge's new beer-focused den that replaced the B-Side Lounge, a venerable cocktail hangout, last fall. Under the bar's dim, red lighting, and to an accompanying playlist that swung from Elliott Smith to Michael Jackson, Toste spelled out the difference between a geek and a snob.

"Snobbery sucks," he said. "Geeks are enthusiastic. They like knowledge, like to learn about things. Beer should be accessible."

The list at Lord Hobo can seem daunting to an amateur, but Toste found the 40 tap lines and massive bottle selection to be a goldmine. Anxious to try as many as possible, he dove in with a Mikkeller Imperial pilsner ($9). "Strong for my taste," he admitted.

I wanted something light to start, so Toste suggested Taras Boulba, a hoppy Belgian bottle. "Really low alcohol, delicious, tiny production, there's a little wild-yeast character to it," he detailed, before rattling off a few personality traits about the brewer himself. This encyclopedic recall would come with almost every beer and cocktail we ordered.

After a few sips, we moved on to sopping agents. Toste, no stranger to the restaurant, was wild about the charcuterie ($12). A board came acked with duck prosciutto, rabbit with istachio, headcheese and a chicken-liver pâté, ll made in-house. Another plate arrived with ried Duxbury oysters ($10), lightly battered and erved with vinegared cabbage and remoulade.

"The fellows in the kitchen do a good job here," Toste affirmed. "Making your own charcuterie is a big deal these days. They take food seriously."

To accompany our smorgasbord, Toste ordered a bottle of Italian beer, Birra del Borgo Re Ale ($30).

As our collection of glassware continued to row, he admitted, "I have a strange habit of ot finishing drinks. A lot of people find that izarre, but I drink for a living. I like to taste tuff, but I don't like to get shitfaced."

Food and beer have been Toste's hobbies ince he was a kid. Raised in Rhode Island, he pent his teenage years playing music profes- ionally with his dad. "I've been hanging out n bars since I was 14," Toste recalled.

He passed on a scholarship to Berklee College of Music so he could tour with his band, working in restaurants to make a living. As a busboy and server at Locke Ober and the Palm, Toste picked up a taste for fine dining, but he eventually found a home at Inman's beer-centric Bukowski Tavern. "I've always had Champagne tastes, but a Budweiser budget, so beer worked for me," he said.

His well-trained palate became apparent as we devoured a plate of meaty scallops served over puréed beets and slivers of blood-orange wedges ($12). Toste eyed the sear marks, pointing out that the chef had cooked them perfectly. Next, we shared an entrée of house-made gnocchi ($18) layered in an oxtail, Parmesan cream sauce. While the pasta was overly dense, the dish provided a chance to experiment.

Toste explained, "There are two ways to think about pairing food with beer: You either want to go opposing flavors or like flavors." The Haandbryggeriet Odin's Triple ($16), a dark Norse ale, was as rich, dense and earthy as the oxtail itself, while the Swedish Oppigards lager ($8) played up the dish's sweetness with bright, dry hoppiness.

"In this case, the beer is really complementing the food," Toste said of the Swede. "I find those opposing flavors to be more interesting."

As our meal came to a close, Toste declared, "People should travel here to find these beers. You've got a ton of draft lines, a slammin' list of bottles. There's a good chance you'll find something you've never tried before. That's what this place is all about." ✖✖✖

BULLY PULPIT

Laws can't stop social warfare.

THE MASS. HOUSE AND Senate recently approved new anti-bully legislation. According to the Associated Press, "The bill would prohibit bullying at schools and clamp down on so-called cyberbullying by prohibiting the use of e-mails, text messages, Internet postings and other electronic means to create a hostile school environment." Dissenting against the bill was Senator O'Doyle, who slapped the paperwork onto the floor of the State House while yelling "O'Doyle rules!"

Governor Deval Patrick is expected to sign the bill, but the notion that we can outlaw bullies is preposterous on many levels. First, have parents and teachers become downtrodden and powerless to the point that they require the threat of jail to impose discipline on sixth-graders? Bullying is already against the rules, so we're really saying that rules count for nothing, and you can't discipline kids without guns and handcuffs. Which, for all I know, might actually be the case. Kids do seem pretty scary.

Second, how do we define bullying? If I call you a stupid, smelly dinkface, does that make me a bully? If I don't invite you to my birthday party, what about then? When my sister-in-law announced she was naming her new baby Keifer, Heather and I warned her that he'd be called "Keifer the Queefer." Sure enough, our prediction came true, and the kid's already getting bullied. He hears taunts of, "How's it going, Queef?" and "Keifer the Queefer smokes too much reefer!" all day long, whenever I visit. I just want him to be prepared.

Assuming we can agree on the legal threshold of bullying, kids will simply find a way to torment each other without crossing that line. They're endlessly creative when it comes to social marginalization. Pass a law against cyberbullying, and they'll go old-school and write chalk slanders on the four-square court. Outlaw that, and they'll invent a new word that means "Billy is a goober." Actually, scratch that—there shouldn't be any kids named Billy. That sounds a little too much like "bully."

No matter what we do, there'll always be a childhood power hierarchy. And learning how to deal with bullies is an important part of growing up. For instance, one winter day in fourth grade, I was sledding at recess when an eighth-grader decided to start shoving little kids down the hill. Taking a stand for my brethren, I crawled to the top, grabbed him around the ankles and wrapped him up. He toppled down the hill and got snow all over his Jordache acid-wash jeans.

He gave me a wedgie I'd never forget. The elastic definitely ripped.

There's a lesson to be learned here: Don't ever stand up to bullies. Because after that kid got up and brushed the snow off, he gave me a wedgie I'd never forget. The elastic definitely ripped out of my underwear, and I think I cried. Standing up for myself really wasn't worth it.

By high school, the tables had turned. Freshman year, I was bullying a guy named Paul in French class. A girl in the class had written him a love letter that fell into the wrong hands and was read by half the school. So I sat behind Paul, saying things like, "Oh, Amanda, I wuv you! My little snookums," and so forth. Suddenly, Paul spun around in his chair, grabbed me by the throat and punched me right out of my desk. One important detail: Paul was a senior. A 6'1", 200-pound senior who was taking freshman French. Now, how would our bullying legislation handle that incident? Technically, I was bullying him, but he kicked my ass. I guess sometimes you should stand up for yourself, if you have a mustache and a 50-pound weight advantage.

Bullies may be the scourge of the playground, but everybody knows that bullies get theirs in the end. The O'Doyles go off a cliff. Biff ends up waxing George McFly's car. And Bill Gates, once a bully victim—I'm just assuming—is now rich enough to make us watch colossally annoying "Windows was my idea" commercials (Really, it was your idea that Windows shouldn't crash so much? Thanks, French chick). But just to be safe, let's remake the movie Mean Girls. Working title: Caring, Nurturing, Friendly Girls.

In the end, the world needs childhood bullies just as it needs bacteria. Maybe if we enact silly bully laws, you'll avoid some aggravation in school. Does that mean you're bully-free for life? I'm afraid not. You'll eventually have a bully boss, or a bully neighbor, or a bully girlfriend. Maybe you'll even live next to a bully country, like Canada does.

And then you won't know how to deal with them. Will you, dork? No, you'll probably cry about it like a little baby. A little dork-baby. Probably gonna cry right now. BUY ME A GRAPE CRUSH FROM THE SODA MACHINE. Or else. ✖✖✖

GOOD WIL

Where there's a Wilfork, there's a Patriots Way.

THE STING OF THAT SUNDAY afternoon in January still hurts. It wasn't the fact that they lost, since we all knew 2009 wasn't our year. It was the way they lost. The first play of the game—an 83-yard run by Baltimore Ravens running back Ray Rice—was all it took, and then the Patriots quit.

Most of them did, anyway. But not Vince Wilfork.

After that debilitating 31-14 loss to the Ravens, Wilfork stood in front of his locker stall, wearing a Boston Bruins home jersey with his own No. 75. While Randy Moss and much of the team ran for the hills, Wilfork didn't hold back. He was upset about the effort. He was upset about the contract renewal process. He was upset because this wasn't the Patriots Way.

These weren't the words of a clueless, overpaid whiner. Wilfork was talking like a leader. But on Route 1 in Foxboro, that doesn't mean much come contract time. Robert Kraft isn't going to simply sign a check for what the market believes you're worth. You're going to have to wait it out, nice and slow.

Wilfork deserved big money this year. He signed a six-year deal as a rookie, not a smart thing to do, and served out his time. He could've demanded the same treatment Asante Samuel got: The Patriots would forego the franchise tag if he agreed not to hold out. No need. Wilfork showed up for the two-a-days in July, and he never veered off course.

"I signed that deal, and I was going to finish it," Wilfork said. "That's the way I do business. I keep my end of the bargain up." It wasn't long after this pronouncement that it looked like things were headed south (maybe he'd sign with the Miami Dolphins, miles from where he grew up). He wanted a serious signing bonus. Eight or nine million dollars wasn't going to cut it. Hell, if he played under the franchise tag, he would've been guaranteed $7 million.

We knew something was happening when the Patriots announced they were "franchis-ing" Wilfork. They put a disclaimer in their press release. They implied that they needed more time to sign a long-term deal. And they didn't lie. Kraft kept his promise and signed Wilfork to a whopping $40 million deal over five years, including a guaranteed signing bonus of $25 million.

"I wanted to get paid fair, and I think I got paid fair," said Wilfork, who promises he won't ask for a renegotiation three or four years from now. "I hold no grudges against no one," he continued. "Like I said, when the time presented itself, especially with the (franchise) tag—when it came to me—it was probably five minutes before we got on the phone and started talking. I think within those five minutes it was like, 'OK, are they going to trade me, or what's going to happen now?'"

"It's nothing personal. If you don't want to win, you don't have to be here."

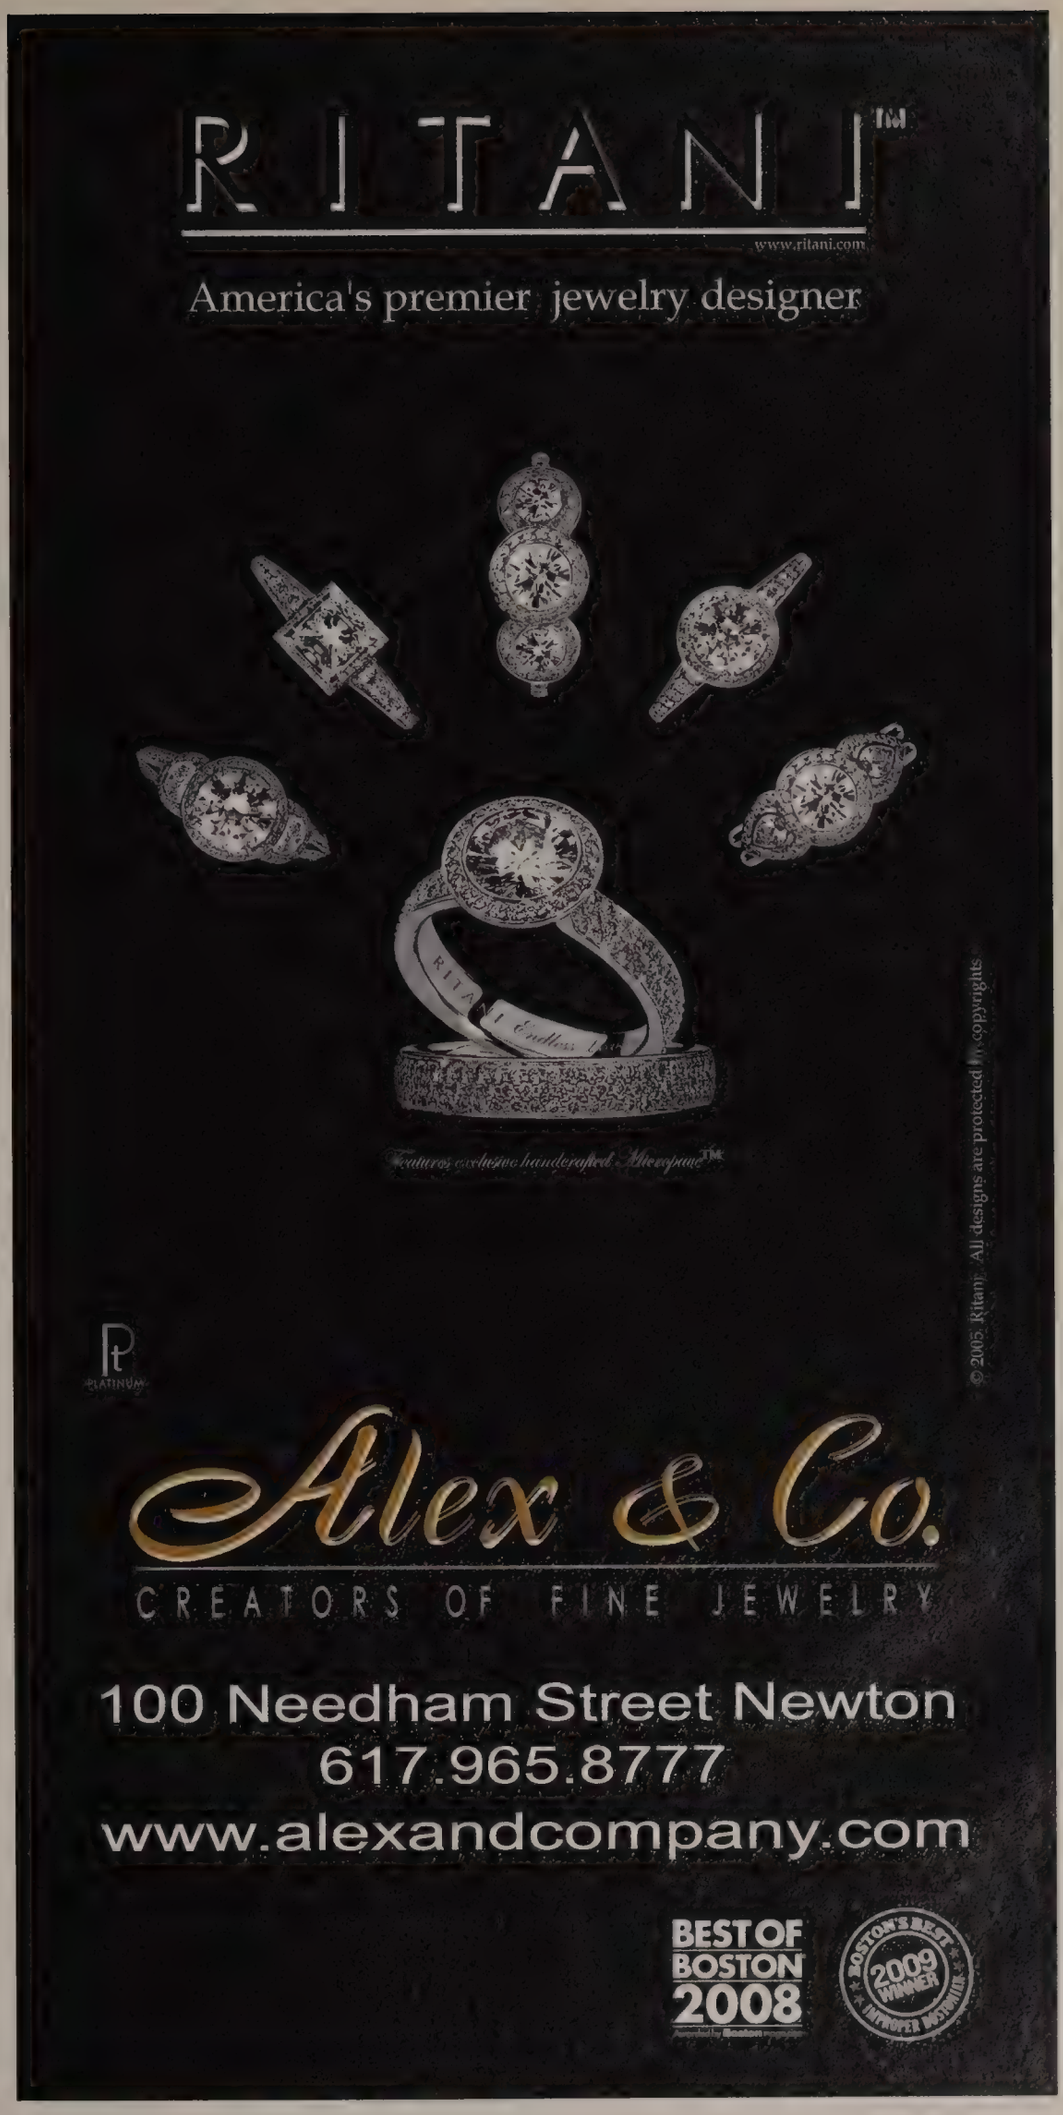
He added, "Once we talked and found out the tag was getting put on, I was positive a deal was going to get done."



The best part of the signing is that it's now official. Wilfork is the new voice of the Patriots locker room. With guys like Tedy Bruschi, Junior Seau, Rodney Harrison and Mike Vrabel "not walking through that door," it was time to pass the torch. Wilfork is officially part of the Patriots' future.

So what did he do at his first official press conference? He put out a warning to his teammates: The B.S. has ended.

"We have to raise our level of play. If something is wrong, we have to address it," he said. "We can't let it go on. We have to get it better, and people have to realize that we're trying to get somewhere. It's nothing personal. If you don't want to win, you don't have to be here, point blank. So if you want to win, this is how we're going to have to do it."

Soon after that speech, Kevin Faulk, Tully Banta-Cain and Leigh Bodden, all key players, were re-upped. Of course, the Patriots still have challenges. They have young players like Jerod Mayo, who took a turn for the worse last season, injuries or not. They have holes on defense, particularly at outside linebacker and cornerback. They still don't have a viable tight end. But they do have a leader, a big one at that.

Signing Wilfork moves the Patriots in the right direction. We're tired of not winning Super Bowls, and we trust in Vince to help change things. ✖✖✖

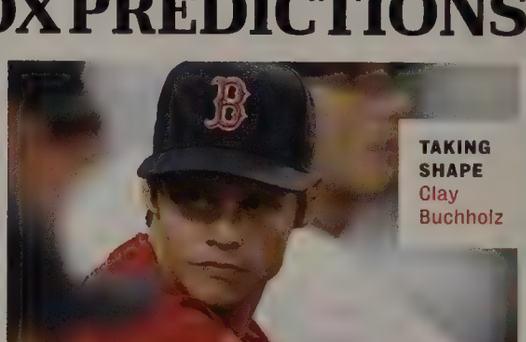
ON BUCHHOLZ, BELTRE, TIGER AND REX

3 Celtics Questions

What the Hell Happened to Marquis Daniels? In the span of a month, he went from the most inspired player on the team to a pair of sunglasses away from a lead role in Weekend at Bernie's 3. Michael Finley's slapped a Band-Aid on the problem, but long-term, the C's are in trouble without 100 percent from Marquis.



Who Are the Odd Men Out? Daniels (assuming he comes around), the starters, Nate Robinson, Sheed and Big Baby are all shoo-ins for playoff minutes. And that makes a nine-man rotation, which is all Doc's used the previous two postseasons. But something tells me that Finley and Tony Allen will both get a little run, and that'll come at Mr. Robinson's expense.

Can They Beat the Best in the East? I know this sounds Carl Everett–crazy, but I still have faith that the C's can beat either the Hawks or the Magic in a playoff series. But against Cleveland? I don't see it. That's why the third seed is so important. Give someone else the first real shot at ending Bron's Cavalier career.

5 RED SOX PREDICTIONS

You Will Be Frustrated This lineup will drive you insane many—at least 50—nights over the next six months. The words "run prevention" will make you break out with a rash in the shape of Marco Scutaro's batting stance. You'll see highlights of Jason Bay and sob like you're watching Ray Kinsella play catch with his dad. But in the end, the Sox will be OK. I promise.

Clay Buchholz Will Confuse You I have conflicting thoughts on Clay's new ESPN ad. On one hand, I love that he had the confidence to pull it off. But on the other, why the hell is he even in a commercial? Take out that no-hitter, and he's no more deserving than Michael Bowden. He's done nothing. Yet, I still believe in Clay. I say he pulls off at least 13 wins.

TAKING SHAPE Clay Buchholz

Adrian Beltre Will Exceed Your Expectations A former Gold Glove third baseman and accused 'roider joins the Sox after a woefully pathetic season. Hmm, where have we heard that before? Oh right, Mike Lowell. Listen, I'm not saying Beltre's about to rewind to 2004, but prepare to be surprised. Maybe not Bill Mueller–surprised, but expect at least .275/26/97. The guy can still play.

This Season Will Be Jonathan Papelbon's Last If he struggles, the Sox will say, "That's it. We're going with Bard." If he returns to form and, in turn, asks for another big raise, the Sox will say, "That's it. We're going with Bard." So enjoy Cinco Ocho while you can, because next year... yup, the Bard thing again.

The Team Will Win the Wild Card If Lester, Lackey and Beckett stay healthy, there's no way the Sox miss the playoffs. Think how they'll wear down an opponent over the course of a three- or four-game series. That's like starting a workweek with three straight Mondays. At some point you just lose steam.

1 ONE PIECE OF REVERSE PSYCHOLOGY (OR IS IT?)

As I write, the Bruins have 10 games left and a three-point lead for the final playoff spot. And as you know, every Bruins-related thought I've had this season has been dead wrong. So with that, I'll say it's a shame the B's are about to blow it. Seriously. Too bad.

2 NFL STORYLINES

On LT With the news that the Jets will star in this year's season of Hard Knocks, two questions come to mind: 1. How many episodes before LT starts bitching about carries, one or one-half? 2. Might Rex Ryan's luscious moobs garner an NC-17 rating? Either way, and as much as I hate to say it, this will be quality TV.

And OT I don't mind the new playoff overtime rules; they're at least better than the old ones. But why not apply them to the whole season? It's only a matter of time before a team gets screwed in Week 17, and they end up changing things, anyway. For once, clean up the shit before it hits the fan.

4 DATES TO WATCH

4/3 Time for the Final Four. Which also happens to be the number of people still alive in your pool. One is a 67-year-old coworker named Ruthie. You hate Ruthie.

4/4 Beckett! Sabathia! Long underwear! The Sox host the Yankees for Opening Night at a frigid Fenway.

Soroff On ALAN CUMMING

The stage and movie star talks about cologne, circumcision and being a "pansexual sex symbol."

ACTOR/WRITER/DIRECTOR/PRODUCER/AUTHOR/PERFUMER ALAN Cumming, 45, was born and raised in Scotland. A veteran of Broadway and the West End, Cumming won a Tony award for his performance as the emcee in Cabaret and an Olivier award for his role in Accidental Death of an Anarchist. On film, he has played everything from a tech billionaire in Romy and Michele's High School Reunion to a James Bond villain in GoldenEye, as well as Nightcrawler in X2: X-Men United and Fegan Floop in the Spy Kids trilogy. He is currently appearing on the CBS show The Good Wife and as the host of WGBH's Masterpiece Mystery. Cumming has also written a novel, Tommy's Tale, hosted a cable show, Eavesdropping With Alan Cumming, and produced an eponymous cologne. Although he lives primarily in New York, he'll be in Boston on April 27 as the honoree at this year's ClimActs fund-raiser for the Theater Offensive.

Jonathan Soroff: Boxers or briefs?
Alan Cumming: Briefs. I need the support.

Glasgow or Edinburgh?
That's such a difficult one. It used to be utterly Glasgow because I went to drama school and lived there, but now I kind of see Edinburgh as a more interesting, cosmopolitan city.

Do you use the "c" word as much as most Scots?
I don't. I use it in a dirty way. In Scotland, it's every other word.

Favorite Bond villain of all time?
Doctor No. Definitely not myself. Although Ernst Blofeld was good, too. The cat was a nice touch.

Historical character you'd most like to play?
Bonnie Prince Charlie.

Funniest person you ever worked with?
Lisa Kudrow. She just cracks me up.

Celebrity you get mistaken for?
Paul Reubens. He gets it about me, too.

Role you think you'll most be remembered for?
The host in Cabaret. Because it was a play and people can't see it anymore, they say, "I never got to see you in it!" In terms of films, Spy Kids is huge. Kids still watch it, although the original audience, I meet them in clubs now.

You named a cologne after yourself. How much does it cost to have Alan Cumming all over you?
Sixty-nine dollars I believe is the price, which I was quite pleased about.

Why a cologne?
It just sort of happened. Somebody suggested it, and I thought, "That sounds hilarious." Next thing I know, I'm lying naked on my back getting photographed like Sophie Dahl.

What does it smell like?
I've got it on right now. It's got tones of rubber, leather, dirt, musk. Very earthy, manly scents.

Stage or screen?
If I had a gun to my head, stage. The connection you have with the audience is just amazing.

Ideal love-scene partner?
Someone funny but who I think is hot as well, so you're not repelled by snogging 'em but you can laugh about it after.

Favorite playwright?
Right now, I'd say Tennessee Williams. And also, [Anton] Chekhov. When someone asked Tennessee Williams for three playwrights who had influenced him, he said, "Chekhov, Chekhov and Chekhov."

Period of history you would've liked to live in?
I would've liked to be around during the Renaissance, because having all these new inventions and discoveries and ideas and things would've been exciting. I'd also quite like to have been alive during the French Resistance. I know it was a terrible time, but I think it's quite romantic and sexy.

Any films you regret doing: The Flintstones? Garfield? Josie and the Pussycats?
No. I don't regret them at all. Hindsight is 20-20. And Josie and the Pussycats? I LOVE that movie!

Anyone you'd never work with again?
Yeah. There was one person who I worked with who sort of became a stalker.

Worst line you ever had to deliver?
It wasn't my line, but I did a soap opera in Scotland, and in one scene I had to chop a tree down on top of a girl and then strangle her because she wasn't dead yet, and she looked up at me and said, "It's OK, Jim. I'm not pregnant!"

Worst audition story?
I guess going in to meet with people you've slept with. That's a bit weird.

You've been described as a "frolicky, pansexual sex symbol..."
It's hilarious, isn't it?

You're a big activist against circumcision...
It's not a sanitary consideration. Just teach your kid how to clean himself. I mean, you wouldn't cut off your ear to prevent ear wax. I just think it's crazy, and there are no compelling scientific reasons to do it.

Three adjectives that describe you as an actor?
I like when people call me lachrymose, just because I like that word. I'm usually described as flamboyant, but I don't really see myself that way. I get cast in a lot of over-the-top roles.

Broadway or the West End?
Broadway, without a doubt.

How do you feel about Hollywood?
I think that when you die there, your soul doesn't go anywhere.

What's your best feature?
My openness.

How hard of a time did you have getting it up for Minnie Driver in Circle of Friends*?*
[Laughs.] It wasn't so hard. But it is funny to look at where we all are now. I was having a nervous breakdown when I shot that film.

Will you play me in my biopic?
If I get a good back end.

When you die, will your name change to Came?
[Laughs.] I'll have one of those double-barreled names: Came-Voraciously. ✖✖✖

Man of Faith

BY MICHAEL HOLLEY PHOTOGRAPHS BY KERRY BRETT

RED SOX PITCHER JON LESTER LOOKS FORWARD.

Jon Lester was hungry, intensely so.

People always said that about Lester when they were talking baseball, marveling at the young Red Sox pitcher's passion for greatness. But this was different. This wasn't the clichéd hunger described by sportswriters and scouts. This was less about fastballs and more about getting food—fast. This was craving everything on the breakfast menu… two times over.

Something was definitely wrong. He'd been eating constantly, yet losing weight. He had the worst kind of back pain, a pain that decided to hover rather than periodically come and go. He had night sweats, often awaking to soaked pillowcases. And during a life-changing road trip nearly four years ago, he found himself either dialing room service or always wanting to.

One August morning in California, Lester ordered eggs, oatmeal, coffee, orange juice, and a mix of this and that. He devoured it all but still felt hungry an hour later. So he called again and ordered the same thing. It was gone in a blink, just like the first time. The hunger had returned in minutes, too. The episodes would've scared him if it hadn't been for his back. His back was confusing, mostly because his usual remedy, popping an Advil, wasn't working.

Not known as a man of many words, Lester was about to have a lot of them thrown his way in Boston. The big one was actually a short word: cancer. There was a long phrase, which his family was more interested in researching than he was: anaplastic large-cell lymphoma. Then there was the word that meant something long, a word he'd always had difficulty putting into practice: patience.

Lester was 22 years old, just 15 starts into his big-league career. Unlike many people his age, he had a vision for his professional life and a plan for how to get there. He foresaw championships, All-Star games and dozens of wins. Like many people of all ages, he wanted it to happen tomorrow.

No one wants to hear that greatness is farther down the road—after chemotherapy. Or that recovery from C.H.O.P. chemotherapy (an acronym for the drugs cyclophosphamide, hydroxydoxorubicin, oncovin and prednisone), a return to the big leagues and Fenway Park would occur—after a minor-league detour nearly 1,000 miles away. And no one wants to hear, or even predict, that following the prayers, doubts, tears and chemo, you'll feel better—after finding the love of your life and marrying her.

exactly what happened. "I had so many people praying for me, I think God got tired of hearing my name," Lester says with a laugh. "I think He said, 'Let's get rid of this thing and cure Lester so I won't have to hear his name anymore.'"

"I HAD SO MANY PEOPLE PRAYING FOR ME, I THINK GOD GOT TIRED OF HEARING MY NAME."

If only the journey to today had been that easy.

Lester is 26, cancer-free and perhaps the best pitcher the Red Sox have. He can command both sides of the plate, something that all pitchers aspire to but few manage. Of those, few are able to accomplish it with Lester's sheer power. He finished last season third in the American League in strikeouts with 225, eight more than Seattle's Felix Hernandez. All things considered—age, ability to pitch in the unsentimental Northeast and performing through adversity—Hernandez might be the only pitcher from another team that the Red Sox see as an equal.

"He's big, he's strong as a horse, and he can cut the ball in to right-handers,'' manager Terry Francona says of the 6' 2" Lester. "He's got what I call a power cutter. It overwhelms people."

The same could be said of the Lester story. Any discussion of a no-hitter, starting Game 1 of a playoff series, or winning the deciding game of the World Series—all of which Lester has achieved post-cancer—would've seemed inappropriate in the summer of 2006.

Lester was admitted to the hospital on Aug. 29. He still remembers the oncologist's words: "You do have cancer, but we can fight it. We can beat it." There were statistics and descriptions, but he thought to himself, "I don't care about all the other B.S. stuff. Tell me vhat I need to do to get better, and 'll do it."

What he needed was six rounds f chemo every 21 days, from Sepember to January.

"Honestly, it's a pain in the ass," ie says. "You feel like crap. You just vant to lie in bed, and after two or hree days you're back to normal. But I got through it by falling into a outine. Baseball players are weird: You can program us to a routine, nd we'll do it even if it's jumping ff a cliff.

"But with chemo, you have to do t. You can't call in sick. And you ave to trust that what's being put nto your body is working, because ou don't see immediate results. t's not like taking Tylenol Cold & Sinus. You have to believe in God and believe in doctors. It's a proess you just have to trust."

Those who've known Lester his entire professional career were not surprised that he was so driven to return to baseball. They saw it when he was 18 years old, fresh out of high school.

"I never worried about Jon Lester," says Ben Cherington, who was the Red Sox farm director in 2002, the year Lester was drafted. "Believe me, with our draft picks, we're watching everything. We go into it assuming that they're not ready to be trusted. From their training, to the food they eat, to what they're up to off the field, we're watching. How many 18-year-olds are prepared for the responsibility? Not many. But he was."

His bosses and teammates noticed that he was a perfectionist who seethed when things didn't go his way. He was more quiet than most, but his expectations were bold. He wanted to coax greatness out of every pitch, every inning, every start.

Lester had the ability and mentality to be a big-league pitcher, but the hole in his game was clear. It was experience. And the only way he could correct it was to pitch and take some lumps. As he says now, "I wanted it to be the future."

There were rarely any personality problems with teammates and managers, if any at all. The biggest controversy he had in the minors didn't actually involve him, but his teammates, and it wound up being a pseudo-version of Punk'd. He was on a stacked team in Sarasota that included prospects Hanley Ramirez, Dustin Pedroia,

LESTER CAN COMMAND BOTH SIDES OF THE PLATE, SOMETHING THAT ALL PITCHERS ASPIRE TO BUT FEW MANAGE.

Jonathan Papelbon, Manny Delcarmen and David Murphy. A few of the guys showed up in slings, convincing Cherington that they'd hurt themselves earlier in the day goofing around on the beach.

"I'm sitting there thinking that it's my worst nightmare as farm director," Cherington says. "I'm trying to think of the phone call I have to make to Theo and how upset he's gonna be."

The call to the general manager never happened. It was a hoax. Even during the elaborate skit, Lester wasn't one of the people in a sling.

One year into pro ball, Lester began to work actively on his patience. A teammate from Georgia, Chad Spann, introduced him to deer and duck hunting. As he stood in the woods of southeast Georgia, Lester quickly saw that there was an art to stalking and shooting prey. There's a reason for every move, and it might take an hour or two for it to be clear. Sometimes there's just a lot of waiting.

He had to remind himself of those lessons in January 2007, after finishing his last round of chemo. He wanted it to be the future again, to get back to his baseball life as quickly as possible. The chemo had worked, but Lester was lacking his usual strength and stamina. There was no way he'd head north with the Red Sox to Boston. And he didn't want to rehab in Fort Myers, the team's spring-training home. So a baseball decision was made, with no thought of romance at all.

They first hung out at a place called Sharkey's Pub. He loved her Southern accent, and the fact that she didn't think she had one. He'd ask her to repeat certain words—"sugar" and "ice"—and when she did, he'd sit back and enjoy the slow lilt.

Her name was Farrah Johnson, and her godfather was, among other things, one of the batting practice pitchers for the Greenville Drive. She was much more of an extrovert than he was, which explains why he did more observing than talking when a large group met at Sharkey's.

They had plenty to talk about; they just didn't know it. She didn't know he was a major-league pitcher who was going to be in South Carolina for just three weeks. He didn't know that she probably knew more about C.H.O.P. chemotherapy than anyone in the room. She was a nursing student finishing up her clinicals.

All of that changed one day when Farrah came home and watched the news. She saw a report on the newest member of the Drive and how he'd been diagnosed with cancer the year before. When she saw him later she asked why he didn't tell her who he was. He explained that he wanted her to like him for who he was, not what he did.

"I thought it was a sweet thing to say and typical of Jon's humility," she says. "I know a lot of guys would've felt the opposite way and totally tried to use their status to get attention."

When it was time for Lester to leave and complete the next phase of his rehab, they stayed in touch. He was the one who taught her to hunt. Since then, she's taken out a doe, buck and big buck.

He was the one who begged her to revisit Anchorman with him because she watched it before they met and didn't think it was funny. "I know people see how serious he can be, but he's a big goofball. He can probably give you 10 quotes from any Will Ferrell movie. And anything from The Hangover."

When Kathie Lester met her son's girlfriend, the path from back pain on the West Coast to hospitalization in Boston to rehab in South Carolina began to make sense. If there'd been no cancer, there would've been no rehab, and no trip to Greenville. The Lesters see it as part of God's plan.

Jon proposed to Farrah in July 2008. They went to dinner at Olives, then sat on a Charlestown bench, overlooking the water. They hadn't been ring shopping nor had they talked about it. The question came as such a surprise that Farrah didn't cry until two days later. Former Sox pitcher Javier Lopez had teased them, saying that a girl who doesn't cry when the question is popped isn't the one.

The reaction, though, was something Lester welcomed after the unpredictability of 2006. Farrah was excited, and she said yes. It was normal. It's all that big moments need to be for the man who hunts, fishes, quotes movies and throws a baseball. In fact, on the night Lester won the World Series for Boston, he couldn't have been more normal. He ordered room service, ate a filling meal and slept in peace. ***

AN ONLINE CHAT WITH BASEBALL'S MOST DEVOTED FOLLOWERS Fan Mail
BY EZRA DYER

THE TERM "FAIR WEATHER FAN" WAS seldom heard in Fenway Park. Around Boston, it applied to the basketball fan in a Bulls jacket, or the guy in the Avalanche hat who couldn't tell Patrick Roy from Rob Roy. Red Sox followers were, by definition, exempt. You can't be a fair weather fan when there's nothing but clouds for 86 years.

But 2004 changed all that. The term suddenly had meaning. I noticed the evolution while vacationing in Italy, where I saw a guy wearing a Red Sox cap. I walked over to chat with him only to discover he spoke no English. He was just some Roman who'd bought a popular hat. And that bummed me out a little bit. It's nice that the Red Sox are internationally popular, but that guy didn't earn his hat. He didn't spend his adult life attending → playoff parties that always ended in commiseration instead of celebration. He wouldn't know that the scene on the streets after the 2004 ALCS was probably crazier than it was after the actual World Series. He doesn't have a stack of Phil Plantier rookie cards sitting in a box somewhere. At least, I'd be very surprised if he did.

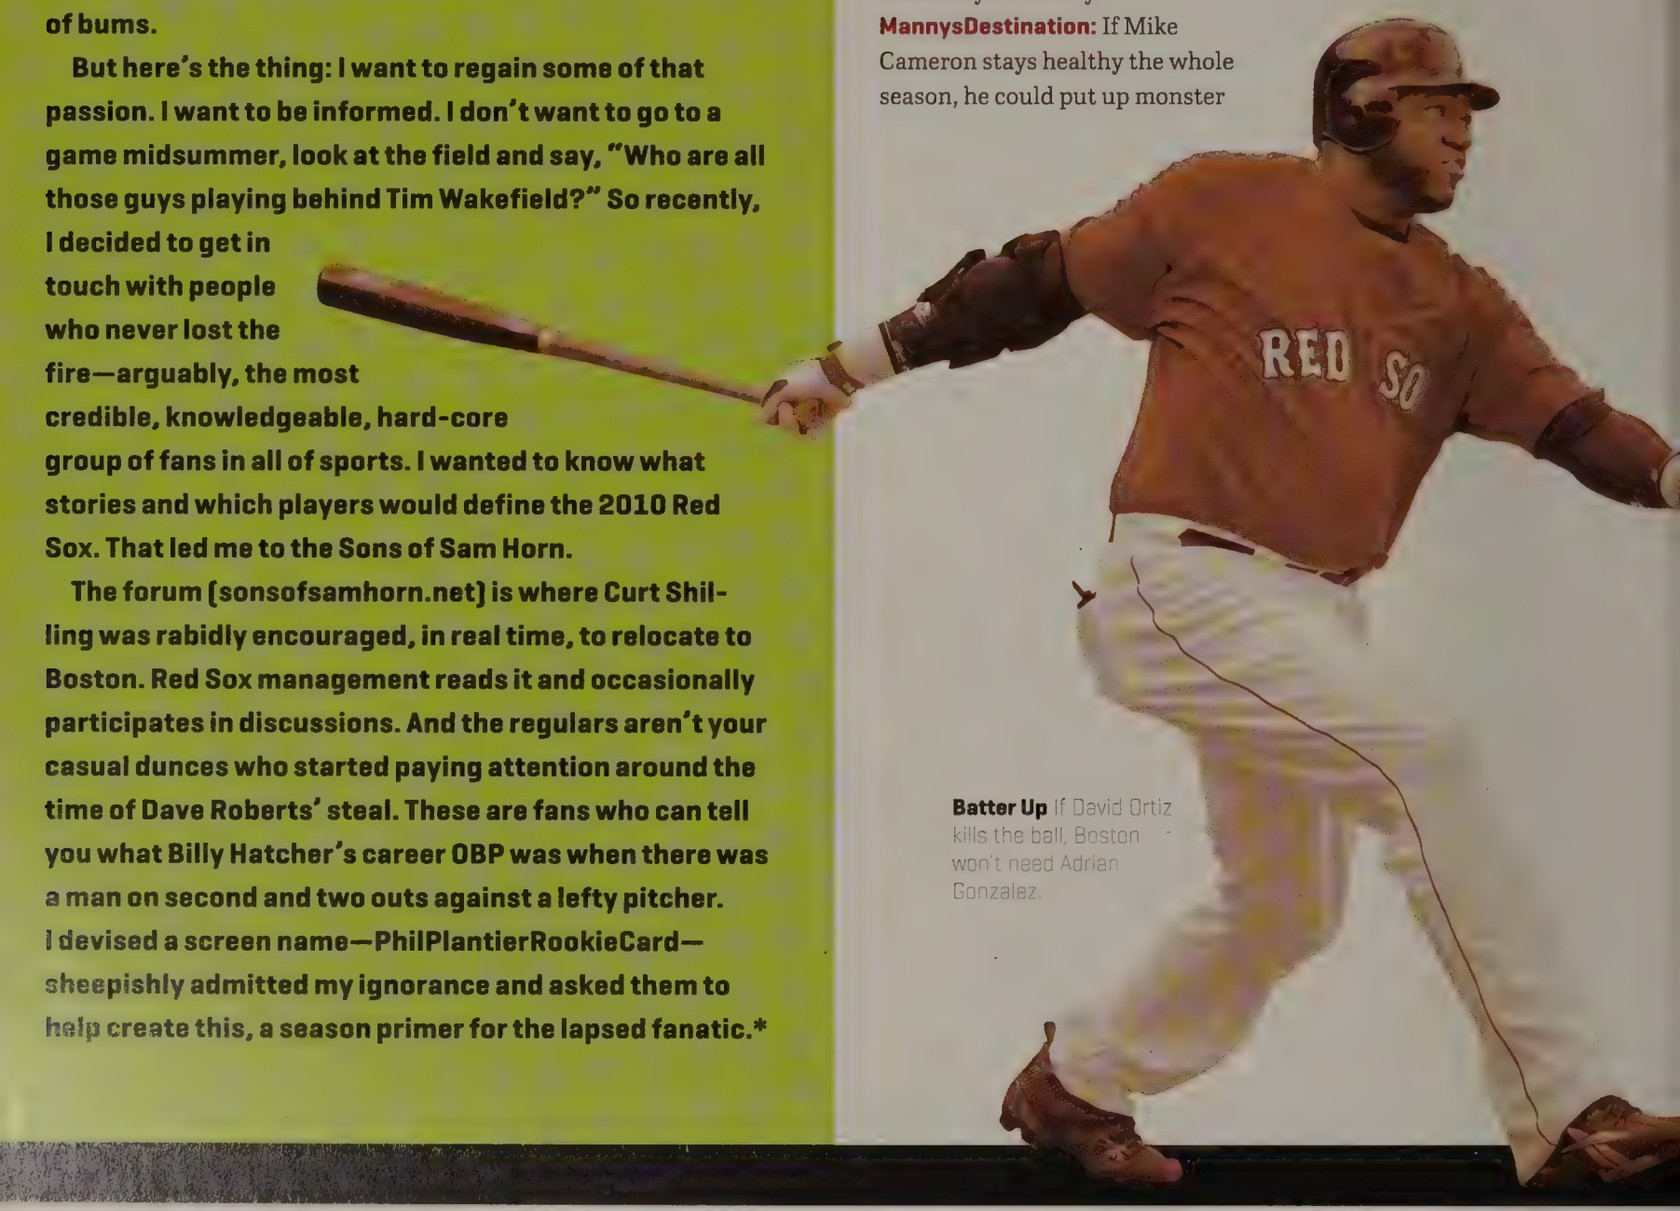
The onslaught of fair weather fans, coupled with the success of two World Championships, created a heretofore unseen creature in the world of baseball: the mildly apathetic Red Sox follower. Which would describe me these days. It was sort of inevitable. Pre-2004 you had the sense that missing a game might mean missing history. That's no longer the case. So now, when I show up at Fenway and a scalper tries to sell me bleacher seats for $100 apiece, I laugh in his face and go to a bar. In the new era of assumed Red Sox excellence, I'm less interested than I was back when they were a bunch of bums.

But here's the thing: I want to regain some of that passion. I want to be informed. I don't want to go to a game midsummer, look at the field and say, "Who are all those guys playing behind Tim Wakefield?" So recently, I decided to get in touch with people who never lost the fire—arguably, the most credible, knowledgeable, hard-core group of fans in all of sports. I wanted to know what stories and which players would define the 2010 Red Sox. That led me to the Sons of Sam Horn.

The forum (sonsofsamhorn.net) is where Curt Schilling was rabidly encouraged, in real time, to relocate to Boston. Red Sox management reads it and occasionally participates in discussions. And the regulars aren't your casual dunces who started paying attention around the time of Dave Roberts' steal. These are fans who can tell you what Billy Hatcher's career OBP was when there was a man on second and two outs against a lefty pitcher. I devised a screen name—PhilPlantierRookieCard—sheepishly admitted my ignorance and asked them to help create this, a season primer for the lapsed fanatic.*

FIRST QUESTION: WHICH NEW PLAYERS ARE GOING TO MAKE THE BIGGEST IMPACT?

Fratboy: Adrian Beltre and Marco Scutaro are the keys. If they're productive on both sides of the ball, the team is going to be outstanding. Otherwise, it'll be a dogfight with the Rays down the stretch.



JimD: Beltre will have the greatest defensive season ever for a Red Sox third baseman. The average fan has no idea that he's so good.

wyatt55: John Lackey. While I don't particularly like the guy, the S.O.B. sure can pitch. Some people will just say, "Look at the improvement in the team E.R.A. Good thing they got Cameron, Beltre, et al." When in fact, the largest single contributor to the improvement may be Lackey.

MannysDestination: If Mike Cameron stays healthy the whole season, he could put up monster numbers, but I fear the latest groin problems are a precursor of things to come. The guy is 37 and playing center field. If there's a glaring red-warning sign flashing somewhere for injury risk, it's probably hovering above center field.

HOW'S OUR ROTATION LOOK?

MyDaughterLovesTomGordon: As Dice-K and Buchholz go, so go the Red Sox. I don't think there's any reason to believe Lackey/Beckett/Lester won't have strong 15-20 win seasons, but Dice-K and Buchholz could seemingly wind up anywhere, from candidates for the Cy to back in the minors (Buck) or back of the pen (Dice-K). If they both post even .500 seasons with E.R.A.s in the mid-4s, the Sox starting rotation vill carry them to the playoffs vith no problem. Could they ut up 75 wins on their own? hat's what I'll be watching. he pen will have a lot of wins to reserve. And no, I don't believe Vake will beat out any of those ve for the starting rotation vhen all is said and done, barring trade of Buchholz.

vyatt55: With Lackey's E.R.A. eing a full run and three quarters etter than Brad Penny's during is stint with the Sox, his ability to o deep into games easing the load n the bullpen and his presence naking Wake the No. 5 starter while Dice-K gets healthy), 2010 houldn't be a "remember to make n extra trip to church on the fifth day" season like 2009 was.

NoLastCall125: Slimmer Dice-K will bounce back to win 15-plus... nd be on the mound for at least our hours in 25 of his 30-plus tarts (the other five-plus he'll get nocked out within three hours/ hree innings).

Eric Van: To me, the starting itcher to watch is Dice-K and his unbelievable career situational splits. Dice-K has allowed hitters eading off the inning to damage him to the tune of a 7.10 E.R.A. equivalent (that's what his E.R.A. would be if everyone hit him that hard and walked that often). In other bases-empty situations, it's 5.27. With runners on base, it's 3.40—except with the bases loaded, where it's 2.20. In fact, since giving up a grand slam to Nick Markakis on Sept. 8, 2007, Dice-K has faced 29 hitters with the bases full, and they are 0 for 24 with 2 BB, 7 K, a HB and 2 SF—a .103 OBP and .000 BA and SA. If those situational splits are actually just luck, then his E.R.A. will jump way up (compared to 2008) because he'll stop consistently pitching out of jams. But if those stats aren't a fluke, that suggests that Dice-K's approach with the bases empty has simply been wrong and that his numbers with runners on represent his true talent level. If Dice-K attacks hitters all the time like he does with the bases full, his situational splits might level off, but at a Cy-worthy level.

Trautwein's Degree: The addition of Lackey gives the Sox four starting pitchers who get the ball from the catcher and throw it back. The shortest game I've ever attended was Game 1 of the 2007 ALDS where Beckett faced off against Lackey. Of course, the Sox also have Daisuke "walk slowly to second base between every damn pitch" Matsuzaka in their rotation.

WHAT A SOSH

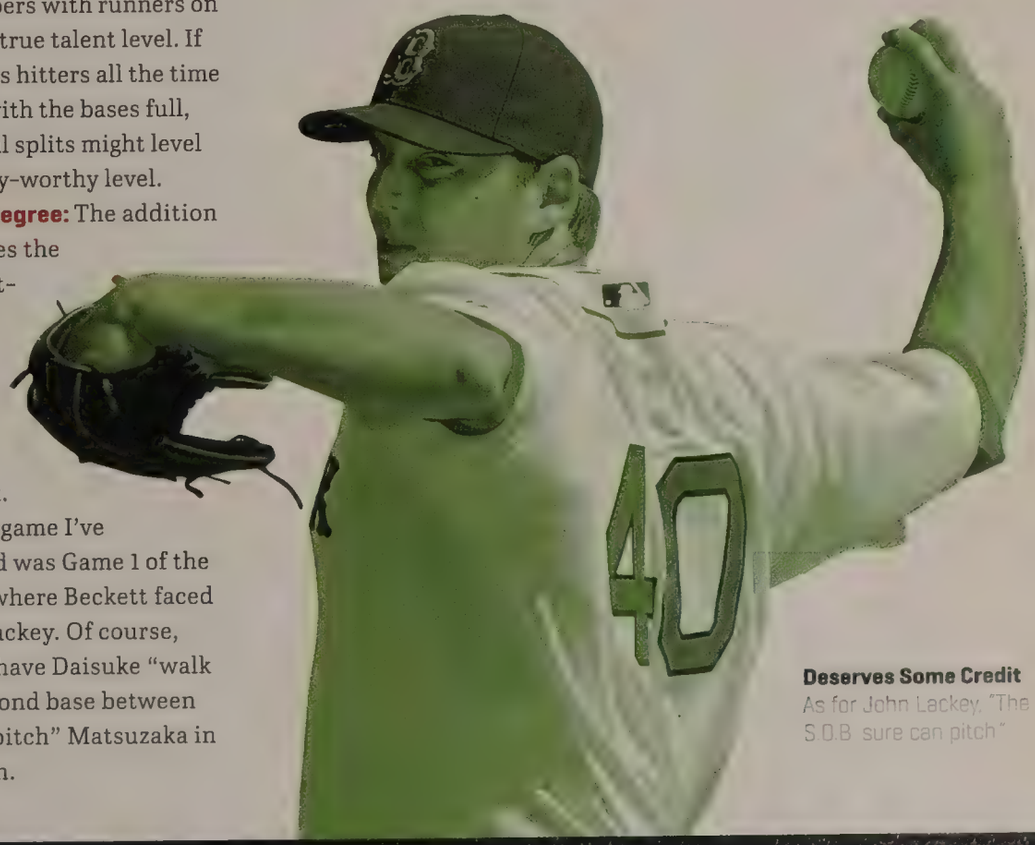
Think you know something about baseball? Specifically, the Red Sox? Test your knowledge on Sons of Sam Horn [SoSH], a message board where statheads sound off. The site, started by a small group of fans about a decade ago, takes sports seriously. New members have to submit an application and adhere to rules that include: "'Lazy' posts will not be tolerated and may result in warnings/suspensions." That means no Mannys.

↘ IS THIS THE YEAR THAT CLAY BUCHHOLZ BREAKS OUT?

Jnai: He changed his approach last year, adding more life to his fastball and becoming more comfortable with his slider. His slider has become a fourth great pitch and gives him three exceptional offspeed pitches (change, curve and slider). If he can figure out the mental part of the game, he's set for a big year.

Trautwein's Degree: Strap in and enjoy the Clay Buchholz show in 2010. It wouldn't shock me one bit if come Memorial Day we're hearing comparisons to Zack Greinke.

↘ WHAT ABOUT THE RELIEVERS? WHICH RELIEVER WILL MAKE US CLENCH OUR BOWELS THE MOST?



Alternate34: I think every single reliever is a candidate. Papelbon, because of how 2009 ended and his position as most important reliever. Okajima, because he continues a steady decline. Delcarmen, because he was at his worst when he needed to be at his best last year. Bard has had bouts with his command and control. Ramirez can be inconsistent and seems sensitive to his workload.

↘ OK, SO PITCHING AND DEFENSE LOOK GOOD. BUT IS THIS TEAM GONNA SCORE ANY RUNS?

Doug Beerabelli: How about a haiku?

Pitching and defense
on a hitless pig?

pokey_reese: As long as everyone trusts the system this will be a 95-win team, even if it doesn't look like it in April. A four-game stretch where they score nine runs isn't an excuse to jettison Beltre and Cameron for Miguel Cabrera and Jason Bay, no matter how it feels at the time. This team is balanced, and that means it'll lose some close games, but it'll win more of them. Of course, that doesn't mean the team won't (or shouldn't) add Adrian behindthepen: 2010 will be the year of the platoon. The Sox have fewer truly elite hitters—the type that do well versus both LHP and RHP. Francona will stick with a core of Pedroia, Youk and Martinez, but we'll see guys like Papi and Drew get more "rest" and guys like Hermida, Lowrie, Lowell and Varitek get occasional starts.

Big Boy Boof Bonser is a guy with a great name.

A Good Defense Adrian Beltre owns the hot corner.

Gonzalez at the trade deadline. If the price is right, that move just makes too much sense over the next few years.

Eric Van: It's well-known that Beltre's numbers with the Mariners were hurt by playing in Safeco, an extreme pitcher's park. The same thing happened when he played in L.A. at Dodger Stadium, also a pitchers' park. In contrast, his numbers in hitters' parks like Coors are terrific. In general, he shows a greatly exaggerated response to a park's influence on batting average. And Fenway is a terrific park for B.A., as much for the hitters' background as its small dimensions. So a key thing to watch will be his home/road split for the Sox. We expect his road numbers to be the same as always but will he show just a normal benefit from Fenway, or a tremendous one? The answer will help shape the team over the next few seasons, because if he's a great fit for the park, he'll probably be here another three or four years.

JMDurron: In spite of all the media wailing about the team going for pitching and defense at the expense of offense, the lineup will still be in the top three or four in the AL in runs scored at the end of the season. Again.

↘ BOOF BONSER: SOMEONE WHO MIGHT BE IMPORTANT OR JUST A GUY WITH A GREAT NAME?

Smiling Joe Hesketh: Bonser has a lifetime E.R.A. of 5.12, missed all of last season due to injury and looks like he ate David Ortiz. So I'm leaning towards "someone who just has a great name."

THE LOCAL DIALECT

SoSH members speak their own language. Here are five favorite abbreviations.

Bora$$: superagent Scott Boras.

CHB: Boston Globe columnist Dan Shaugnessy. Stands for "curly haired boyfriend" and goes back to an insult made by former player Carl Everett.

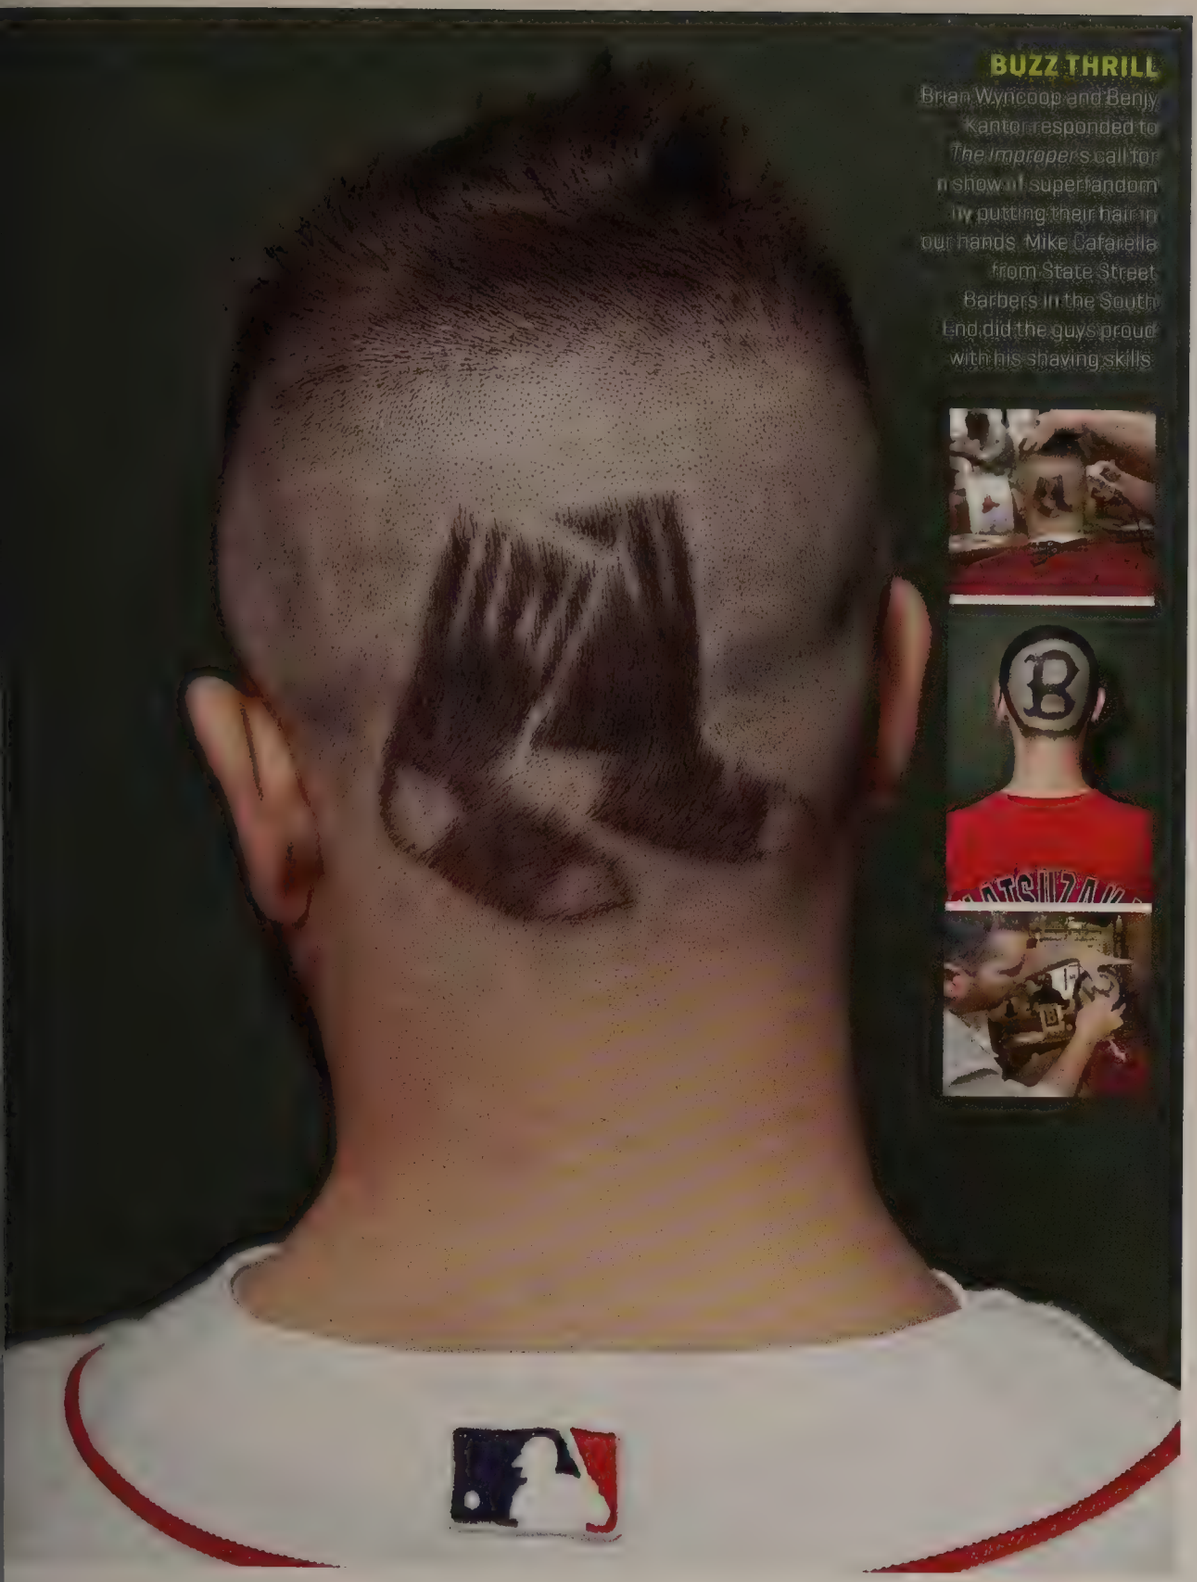
Fruitbat: New York Yankees closer Mariano Rivera.

Judas: Johnny Damon.

MFY: New York Yankees. You can probably guess what it stands for.

↘ DATES TO WATCH?

Soxy Brown: June 18–20: The L.A. Dodgers come to Fenway. Th return of Manny being Manny.



Lose Remerswaal: The day that Curt in the Car calls WEEI because the Sox have fallen below .500. He'll give his ideas as to what the team should've done. Giving him another shot won't h one of them, but he'll agree that might help. This could all happe on April 5.

↘ IF THE SOX HAVE A DISTRESSING NUMBER OF 2-1 LOSSES AND START LOOKIN FOR A NEW BAT, WHO MIGHT THEY WANT? AND WHO WOULD THEY GIVE UP TO MAKE THAT DEAL?

Lose Remerswaal: Adrian Gonza lez and Prince Fielder are the ob ous answers. Carl Crawford wou be an amazing get.

EastCoasterOutWest: The question is, if they want to get Fielder or Gonzalez, are Bowden or Tazawa ready to come up as regulars? And would a rotation Lackey/Lester/Matsuzaka/Buch holz/Bowden (Tazawa) be good enough to allow using Beckett (with Anderson/Kelly if we're putting together a strong packag as a trade chip?

Frisbetarian: Although I think Gonzalez will be traded this season, and I'd love to see him i a Red Sox uniform, it's unlikely. talked to a National League scou this winter, and he said that Jed Hoyer would have a difficult tim trading his team's star player to his old team unless he clearly "won" the trade because there would be so much criticism of a new GM "helping his old team." Since Jed and Theo both know the Red Sox' prospects well and use similar assessment tools, th chances of either GM getting th upper hand in a trade is virtuall impossible.

BUZZ THRILL
Brian Wyncoop and Benjy Kantor responded to The Improper's call for a show of superfandom by putting their hair in our hands. Mike Cafarella from State Street Barbers in the South End did the guys proud with his shaving skills.

dokes: The bat question de-nds on who is faltering. If Ortiz, ık and Beltre are all killing the l, then getting Gonzalez isn't ribly helpful. I think that makes s discussion less than simple.
at said, I have an irrational eball crush on Joey Votto.

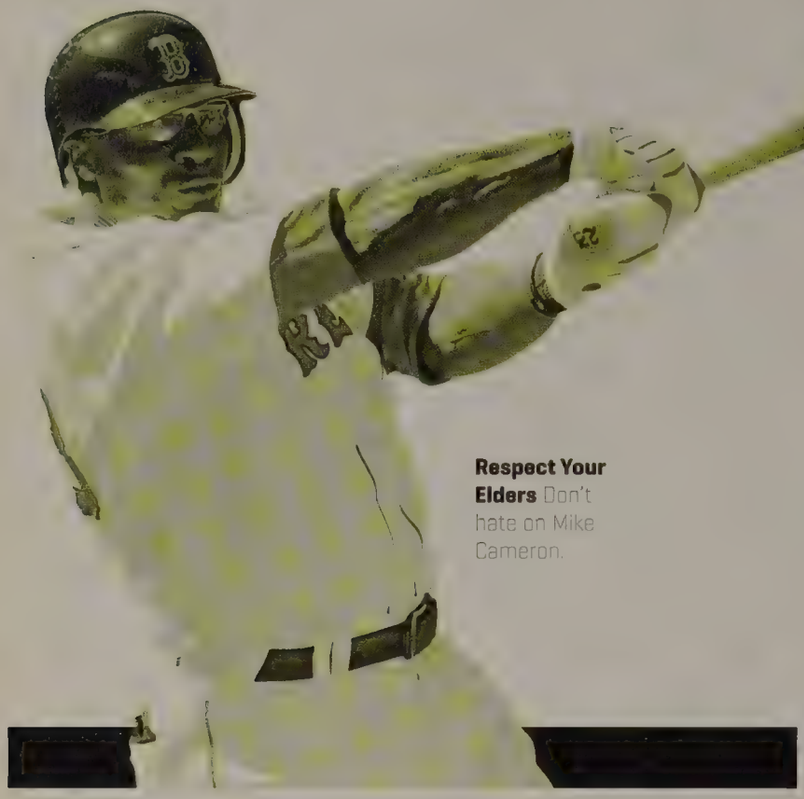
AlNipper49: I wouldn't look at one hitter. If we have a distressing number of 2-1 losses then a big bat would probably do [relative] squat to help things out.

Trautwein's Degree: If you read Steve Mastroyin's fine article in the Red Sox Annual, you'd know that the Red Sox offense should be very good and that a number of 2-1 losses are very unlikely.

SonsOfCharlieZink: If there are many close games, the Sox will most likely trade for a 180-foot wall around the infield. After all, a run saved is a run earned.

↘ SO... HOW ABOUT THOSE YANKEES?



Frisbetarian: A huge story this year could be the massive monetary advantage the Yankees have over the rest of baseball. Since 2003, the Yankees have spent well over $600 million more in average annual salary and luxury tax than the second highest payrolled team in baseball, the Red Sox. That comes out to around $90 million each season. Now that Big George is out of the picture and the baseball guys are running the operations in the Bronx, that Brobdingnagian advantage could be insurmountable for the rest of baseball.

TomRicardo: I'm so sick of people trying to pin baseball as uncompetitive because the Yankees spend so much money. Baseball has the most parity of any sport, yet the widest gap of spending. The best teams only win about 60 percent of the time and the worst about 40 percent. Really, any decently run organization could have a chance to make a run. The Yankees still need luck on their side to win. They certainly aren't the hands-down favorites to win despite their enormous spending. The money is spent inefficiently, and they're going to end up handcuffed later on.

Sille Skrub: You can bring up any/every example you want, but you'll never convince me that there's an equal playing field in MLB. I don't dislike the Yankees for buying the World Series last season. It's their right. They played within the rules. I dislike the system.

TomRicardo: Over the past two seasons, they spent $200-plus million more than the Red Sox to have the privilege of getting two extra wins. So basically, the Yankees are paying $100 million per win. If you include 2007, the Yankees have spent close to $300 million more than the Red Sox for the same number of wins and championships—and one less playoff berth. Maybe if they weren't a completely incompetent organization, we'd be in trouble. The Yankees are like an English professor getting hammered off his ass and entering the National Spelling Bee. People start crying about the English professor having an unfair advantage, but they don't notice him slurring his words and trying to hump the mike stand.

"It'll be an awesome season."

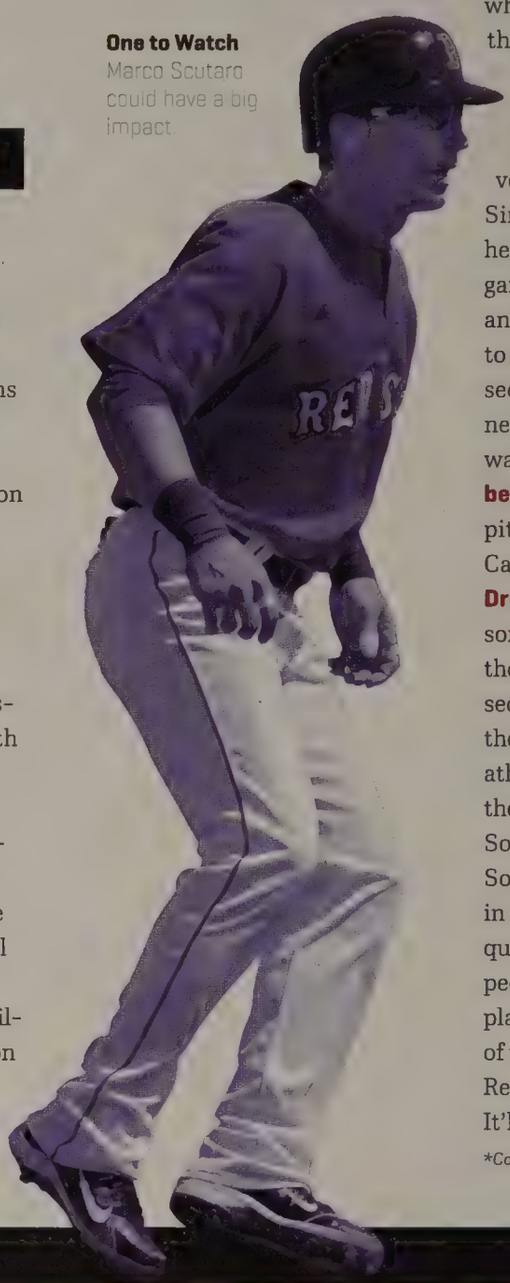
↘ WHAT OTHER PREDICTIONS ARE IN THE SOSH CRYSTAL BALL?

joe dokes: Balls that used to be hits in left center field will be outs. Balls that used to go through the 5-6 hole will be outs. Don Orsillo will use the word "testicle" a lot.

TomRicardo: People will be falling over themselves to find ways to hate on Cameron, proving that (along with JD Drew) Red Sox fans can irrationally hate two outfielders at the same time. "Cameron never dives" will be a constant drone, as will "Bay is better than Cameron," despite the fact that Bay will allow about 50 extra runs by not getting to balls in the new Citi Field. We all know Dennis & Callahan will be especially keen on pointing out Cameron's faults.

JMDurron: With Victor Martinez taking most of the workload at catcher, Jason Varitek will actually resemble a useful MLB player. Varitek's relative uselessness in 2009 had more to do with injuries than with a significant decline in skills. The improvement of going from Varitek/Kottaras to Martinez/Varitek on the offense is being overlooked by the media. And, as usual, the fans will be screaming for, and fantasizing about, every big-name player available (or thought to be available) on the trade market. Unlike 2009, the Red Sox won't make a move for any of them.

John Marzano Olympic Hero: Theo Epstein is going to make a big trade in July. Right this very second, that player's wearing a different uniform, and he doesn't know that he's going to be sent to Boston. If the player does well in his first week, we'll take him to our collective bosoms and completely forget what our team was like without this person. If he stinks, we'll beat our chests and lament the loss of the player Boston traded away. We're nothing if not sluts. Also, there'll be a concert at Fenway this summer. Despite the hype, it will undoubtedly suck big-time (unless it's Pearl Jam).



pokey_reese: This isn't really a prediction, but I'm looking forward to Jerry Remy returning to the booth on a full-time basis. I've never been a huge fan of any announcer, and I gave him a fair share of criticism at times. But after a few weeks last season, I realized how hard it is to find guy who can do that job at all, and then I honestly started to miss him. Not his commentary, or stories about other former players that he knew, just his voice, his presence in my home. Since I've been watching the Sox, he's been with me for about 150 games, 450-plus hours a season, and I'm really looking forward to having him back, to making it seem like baseball season again. I never thought I'd say it, but I can't wait to hear Remy's voice.

behindthepen: Better defense and pitching means we can hit the Cask'N Flagon by 9 pm!

Drocca: The Red Sox will win some baseball games. Sometimes those games will be won in consecutive fashion. We'll all admire the genius of the front office, the athletic prowess of the players and the beauty of the game. The Red Sox will lose some baseball games. Sometimes those games will be lost in consecutive fashion. We'll all question the front office, be suspect of the athletic abilities of the players and the ultimate unfairness of the game. During blowouts, Jerry Remy will giggle uncontrollably. It'll be an awesome season. ✖✖✖

Ajami ★★ ½ One of this year's Oscar nominees for best foreign language film, this collaboration between Palestinian Scandar Copti and Israeli Yaron Shani is a nerve-jangling crime drama chronicling the ways sectarian strife creeps into everything, including the underworld. As a collection of crossed wires and doomed good intentions set in the Tel Aviv suburb of Yaffa, the movie makes it clear that surviving in this neighborhood is hard enough without also having to take part in a Holy War. Ajami is broken into six overlapping chapters, each following a different protagonist on a slightly skewed timeline. But the more that's revealed, the more Copti and Shani's puzzle starts to seem gimmicky and cheap. There's a vivid sense of place, and it's impossible not to feel for these young characters, but a more straightforward telling may have granted Ajami the noble inevitability of tragedy. As is, it's merely clever. (At Kendall Square and West Newton.)

Alice In Wonderland ★ ½ It's hard to remember now, but there was a time when Tim Burton was an original, exciting filmmaker and not just a brand name. These days, you know his formula. Burton takes an existing property and gussies it up with kooky production design and overindulgent performances from his wife, Helena Bonham Carter, and his other wife, Johnny Depp. The extravagant failure of Alice in Wonderland feels like nothing more than a once-great director beating his head against the brick wall of an artistic dead end. Not an adaptation of Lewis Carroll's book but a sequel, Linda Woolverton's screenplay finds a 19-year-old Alice returning to a Wonderland she barely recalls visiting. If this sounds familiar, that's because Steven Spielberg used the same faulty scenario for his awful Peter Pan flick, Hook. This bizarre rip-off of one of history's biggest bombs is a joyless, empty film. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Avatar ★ ½ Twelve years and some $400 million later, James Cameron's latest opus lands with a thud. Sure, you can admire the 3-D presentation, performance-capture technique and computer animation. (If you're not already impressed enough, characters keep elbowing you in the ribs, a reminder that you're watching something amazing.) This is groundbreaking, next-level technology, and I was bored out of my damn mind. Looking like a tacky airbrush painting, Avatar is CGI eye candy by way of prog-rock album covers with an absence of characterization and an abundance of corny dialogue. Unabashedly ripping off Terrence Malick's The New World, Kevin Costner's Dances With Wolves and his own Aliens, Cameron sends Sam Worthington's crippled space marine to a distant planet to reenact a banal white-guy-saves-the-natives fantasy. It feels recycled, rehashed and more like an F/X demo reel than an actual movie. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

The Book of Eli ★ ½ Essentially The Road for Dummies, directors Allen and Albert Hughes' postapocalyptic slog stars Denzel Washington as a taciturn, almost supernaturally gifted protector of the last remaining copy of the King James Bible. Hacking and slashing off limbs to spread the word of God (which I think may be missing the point), Washington keeps the Good Book from falling into the hands of nasty folk like Gary Oldman's scenery-chewing whorehouse owner. Oldman's predictably hambone performance nods to Ian McShane's immortal work in Deadwood, and it's fascinating how much the Hughes Brothers slave to replicate sequences from other movies without coming up with an original idea of their own. There's more than a little Mad Max, with certain scenes stolen outright from Children of Men. As if the constant visual references to Sergio Leone's spaghetti Westerns weren't enough, one of the characters can't stop whistling Ennio Morricone music cues. There's nothing here you haven't seen done before, and done better. (In the suburbs.)

The Bounty Hunter ★ Do you think Jennifer Aniston and Gerard Butler even bother to watch their films? What is it with these two? If I see either one on a movie poster, I know I'm in for a night of crap. In this desultory, abysmally directed action-comedy, Butler stars as a drunken skiptracer charged with dragging his embittered ex-wife (Aniston) to jail. She's a tough-talking reporter (sure, she is) investigating a suicide that may have been a murder.

Bong Joon-ho's thriller edges dangerously close to cliché.

Mother ★★★
Starring Kim Hye-ja, Won Bin, Jin Ku and Yoon Jae-moon. Written by Park Eun-kyo and Bong Joon-ho. Directed by Bong Joon-ho. At Kendall Square Cinema.

SAYING THERE'S A THIN LINE between comedy and tragedy doesn't do Bong Joon-ho's films justice. In this director's lopsided universe, slapstick and melodrama coexist on the same loopy continuum, with deadpan stumblebums lightening up even the darkest hours.

If Bong doesn't ring a bell, he should. At the fighting age of 40, "South Korea's Steven Spielberg" was honored last month with a retrospective at the Harvard Film Archive. Afterward, we spoke about his commitment to tonal shifts. "When I go to a funeral, attired in black, I should be sad, and I should be

Think they'll uncover the truth? Wonder if they'll get back together? Boasting production values unfit for late-night cable flicks, the movie looks washed-out and cheap. Butler is loutish and unappealing, while Aniston remains improbably tanned and glammed. No effort whatsoever was expended in the making of this movie. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Cop Out ★ A self-conscious throwback to crummy buddy comedies, Kevin Smith's lethargic latest doesn't have a fraction of the wit or invention of the movies it's trying to send up. Bruce Willis and Tracy Morgan star as two rogue NYPD officers on the trail of a stolen baseball card. To say there is little at stake would be a woeful understatement, and Morgan merely brays scatological non sequiturs while Willis recedes into the background, acting with his sunglasses. Smith, who carved out a career with sometimes brightly written, always poorly made, slacker comedies, is working as a director-for-hire for the first time. The result is a reminder of why filmmaker David Gordon Green once called Kevin Smith movies "a Special Olympics for Film." Cop Out is a pathetically paced inside-joke. Only Harold Faltermeyer's synth-score has the courage of its tacky convictions. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Crazy Heart ★★ ½ In his best performance since The Big Lebowski, Jeff Bridges stars as a washed-up, alcoholic country singer touring lousy Southwestern dive bars. Scott Cooper's debut feature initially boasts a grungy authenticity, but just when you think Crazy Heart is on its way to being The Wrestler of country music, a banal redemption formula kicks in and sends the whole film reeling off into inspirational-TV-movie land. The too-young Maggie Gyllenhaal proves an improbable love interest for Bridges' seedy troubadour, and (an excellent) Colin Farrell drops by as a former protégé who makes success look far too easy. The grim, admirable desolation of the film's early passages is quickly abandoned for garden-variety uplift and clichéd rehab scenes. The late-game addition of Robert Duvall as a curmudgeonly AA aficionado only adds to the phoniness. These brave performances deserved better. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Dear John ★ ½ There's something queasy about bazillion-selling author Nicholas Sparks' concept of romance. Specializing in star-crossed lovers torn asunder before they're ever forced to get down to the messy business of learning to accept one another's imperfections, his is a juvenile and troubling formula. Usually Sparks just kills one of the characters off, as in A Walk to Remember, Message in a Bottle or Nights in Rodanthe. But Dear John is even more callous. During a couple of weeks on the beach, mumble-mouthed GI Channing Tatum falls hard for Amanda Seyfried's doe-eyed friend to autistic children and horses. Soon duty calls, and the two exchange awkward, handwritten correspondence for seven years (or about six years longer than it would've taken normal people to get over a summer fling). In this effort from formerly talented director Lasse Hallström, everything just lies there martyred and inert. (In the suburbs.)

nourning, but there are always details that nake me chuckle," he admitted. "In contrast, when I go to a party I become more and more nxious, until eventually I find myself in a orner or outside on a balcony, alienated from he group."

The signature moment of Bong's oeuvre rrives in his 2006 smash The Host. After a lumsy mutant sea creature gobbles up gawk-rs along the Han River, a fight breaks out mong grief-stricken relatives at a young girl's uneral. The sloppy fisticuffs devolve into goofy pratfalls by the wailing mourners. Do we laugh or do we cry? In Bong's films, these reactions needn't be mutually exclusive.

Mother, his fourth feature, is a slippery number. Refusing to let the audience grow comfortable within the ever-shifting tones and plot strands, it's a whodunit like no other—veering from social satire to family drama to black comedy. At the same time, it's the first of this dazzling director's movies that feels familiar.

Oafish young Do-joon (Won Bin) is 27 and presumably mentally handicapped. Often seen staggering around a dirt-poor village in a drunken stupor with his thuggish best friend Jin-tae (Jin Ku), Do-joon is nonetheless doted on by his fiercely protective, alarmingly affectionate mother. Remarkably played by Kim Hye-ja, she's a primal conflagration of maternal anxiety. Fretting every time he leaves the house, fussing over his meals and even cuddling with him in bed at night, Mother's title character should be terrifying, and yet Kim brings such deep fissures of sorrow and regret to the performance, your heart goes out to her all the same.

Then one night a promiscuous schoolgirl is murdered, and her lifeless body draped atop a building for the entire town to see. Physical evidence places Do-joon at the scene, which is more than enough for the kind of overworked, exhausted detectives that tend to pop up in Bong's films. As in his 2003 breakthrough Memories of Murder, the director takes a dim view of law enforcement, presenting a bunch of working stiffs who accidentally destroy nearly as much evidence as they gather.

With her son railroaded by the justice system, Mother has no choice but to turn amateur sleuth and try to clear Do-joon's name on her own. It's amusing to watch this matronly lady burgle criminals' apartments and fumble with the fundamentals of forensics. It's even more delicious when she enlists the help of cruel Jin-tae, who takes up the cause not out of any real devotion to his buddy, but more for the opportunity to bust some heads and carry on with a swagger borrowed from countless cop shows.

Ever restless, Bong isn't content to simply upend the usual detective trappings. The film is more indulgent of blind alleys than are the director's previous pictures, and Mother heads into murkier waters as repressed memories and the mystery of a dead girl's "pervert phone" emerge. But there's still a nagging sense of déjà vu.

Mother is a mashup of Memories of Murder's bureaucratic incompetence and the central theme of The Host, in which oddball family members step up to take charge of unexpected genre roles. Even Do-joon's quirky disability feels stale compared to the previous picture's Song Kang-ho—the first monster-movie hero to endure a lobotomy and show no outward effect on his personality.

Perhaps I'm being too hard on a movie that's better than most, but it's difficult not to hold extraordinary talents to a higher standard. Four films in feels a bit early for Bong to be repeating himself. ✖✖✖

Blair With Flair

Polarizing Direction Roman Polanski's latest, The Ghost Writer, delivers suspense with style and a strong performance from Pierce Brosnan.

An Education ★★ ½ In what's sure to be Roman Polanski's favorite film of the year, dazzling newcomer Carey Mulligan stars as a 16-year-old schoolgirl who falls under the sway of Peter Sarsgaard's suave 30-something hepcat in gloomy, postwar Britain. Adapted by novelist Nick Hornby from Lynn Barber's memoir, the movie takes a tender look back at statutory rape as a rite of passage, and it's a testament to some fine performances that the film only feels icky in retrospect. There's nobody better than Hornby at dissecting all the ways people like to define themselves through their tastes and fascinations, but in nearly every other respect, his screenplay is too fussy and neat for its own good. This is a very polite, middlebrow view of what must've actually been an extremely messy affair. Director Lone Scherfig keeps everything humming pleasantly along, with even the inevitable betrayals and recriminations occurring at a genteel pitch. It's as if all the characters are afraid to raise their voices. The feel-good final reel is almost unforgivable. (At West Newton and in the suburbs.)

The Ghost Writer ★★★ ½ It's not my job to weigh in on Roman Polanski's personal issues. Sure, I'd never let him within a mile of my underage cousins, but The Ghost Writer is such a superlative example of craftsmanship that I walked out of the theater on a cloud. Adapted from Robert Harris' novel, this is a humdrum potboiler polished to a very fine sheen. Ewan McGregor gives his least-offensive performance in years as a hack writer assigned to wrestle the unwieldy memoirs of a transparent Tony Blair stand-in (strikingly well-played by Pierce Brosnan) into something publishable. What matters isn't the plot but the air of malevolence that Polanski brings to every seemingly innocuous conversation. He creates suspense without cutting, positioning the camera slightly off-axis for long takes that induce a sense of overwhelming dread. There's a casual elegance to these compositions, and Polanski displays an old-school command of the medium. Not a great story, but they just don't make 'em like this anymore. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Green Zone ★★ Director Paul Greengrass alternates between harrowing docudramas like Bloody Sunday or United 93 and the whip-smart, blockbuster satisfactions of his Jason Bourne sequels. Teaming with his muse, Matt Damon, Greengrass attempts to merge the two forms with this propulsive action-adventure loosely based on Rajiv Chandrasekaran's nonfiction best seller, Imperial Life in the Emerald City. Set in Baghdad during the summer of 2003, Green Zone stars Damon as a no-nonsense grunt who's shocked to discover that there are no weapons of mass destruction. The problem here is that Greengrass' two skill-sets cancel each other out, as his knack for packing the jittery frames with verisimilitude is drowned out by the dopey demands of Brian Helgeland's crowd-pleasing screenplay. The quagmire in Iraq is too complex a scenario to serve as backdrop for composite villains and pat resolutions. Damon is terrific, as always, and Greengrass crafts some suspenseful set-pieces, but the fictional happy ending is an insult. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

It's Complicated ★★★ There's such a lightness to Meryl Streep's work these days—even in something as wretched as Mamma Mia!—that she seems to be having the time of her life. Same goes for Alec Baldwin, whose middle-aged paunch has unleashed his inner comedian. Writer/director Nancy Meyers honestly doesn't have to do much besides put these dynamos together and let them riff. Playing a couple that's been divorced for a decade, Streep and Baldwin drunkenly hook up the night before their son's college graduation and spend the rest of the movie negotiating the horny aftershocks. Baldwin's remarried to a bitchy younger woman (Lake Bell, harshly photographed to give Streep the advantage) while Meryl finds herself in a tentative courtship with Steve Martin's sensitive architect. Like most Meyers movies, this one wallows uncomfortably in ostentatious displays of wealth. But there's no denying the giddy chemistry between Streep and Baldwin. They're both having so much fun it's contagious. (In the suburbs.)

A Prophet ★★★ ½ A best foreign-language film Oscar nominee, Jacques Audiard's entertaining gangster epic is a story about pluck and ingenuity working in all the wrong ways. Tahar Rahim stars as Malik El Djebena, a helpless young man who enters jail as an illiterate thug, only to blossom into a modern-day Michael Corleone over the span of six years. Savagely beaten on his arrival and bullied into a murder by a ruthless gang of elderly Corsicans, El Djebena quietly assimilates to prison life and works every setback to his own Machiavellian advantage. Audiard slyly comments on France's changing racial landscape, as the old-school Corsicans ruling the roost gradually find themselves outnumbered by their Arab counterparts. The diminishment of entrenched power opens up a world of opportunity for the ever-alert protagonist, and Rahim's remarkable performance expands as his character's confidence grows. El Djebena manipulates gangs and plots against one another in a cunning chess match, with amoral, crowd-pleasing results. (At Kendall Square and West Newton.)

Sherlock Holmes ★★★ ½ Folks who grew up on the tweedy elegance of Basil Rathbone's

Crime Scenes

Bossed Around An offer you can't refuse? See a masterpiece of American cinema on one of the last remaining silver screens in the country. On April 12, Coolidge Corner Theatre dims the lights for Francis Ford Coppola's classic The Godfather, his legendary movie about Italian-American fathers, sons, guns and cannolis. There's some epic tragedy in there, too. Domenica Cerasaro

1940s B-movies might quibble with director Guy Ritchie's presentation of Sherlock Holmes (Robert Downey Jr.) as a loutish, bare-knuckle-brawling, manic-depressive. However, I found the film to be the most pleasant surprise I've had at the theater since Star Trek. It's a jaunty, very funny picture. So often in action movies brainpower is synonymous with weakness, but the script presents intelligence as just another form of bad-assery, with Holmes using his encyclopedic knowledge of human anatomy to overcome foes twice his size. Downey and Jude Law's Watson have the easy, bristling chemistry of an old married couple, and Sherlock's only problems arrive when the screenplay keeps them apart. (In the suburbs.)

Shutter Island ★★★ ½ Martin Scorsese's latest is a work of malevolent ambience that works in spite of the occasionally lame story it's trying to tell. This is a Technicolor phantasmagoria seen almost exclusively through the point of view of its tormented, guilt-ridden antihero. Leonardo DiCaprio's federal marshal Teddy Daniels arrives on a hyperbolically forbidding island in Boston Harbor to investigate the abrupt disappearance of a mental patient at a hospital where rumors of mind-control experiments run rampant. It's an exercise in style, with a brilliant filmmaker flexing his muscles on inferior material. Scorsese telegraphs "the twist" in the opening moments, asking the audience to see the film as something scarier and more substantial than the simple narrative trick pulled in Dennis Lehane's novel. The earlier you figure out the "surprise" ending, the more rewarding the movie becomes as a portrait of denial and self-hatred. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Valentine's Day ★ Just as punishing and unpleasant, but somehow feeling even longer than the fake holiday after which it was named, Garry Marshall's omnibus of clichés plays out like a lowlight reel of the worst parts of every romantic comedy you've hated during the past few years. Inelegantly juggling dozens of characters and disparate plotlines among a massive cast of also-rans, it's a logjam of sitcom-contrived vignettes and go-nowhere anecdotes. A lobotomized Love Actually, Valentine's Day sputters and falters for over two hours, while folks like Ashton Kutcher, George Lopez and Jessica Biel do spit-takes and pratfalls and overact so maniacally, only the relaxed, phoned-in cameo from Julia Roberts kept me from poking my eyes out. It's a horribly made movie that takes the built-in audience for granted. A friend called it "Crash, but with flowers instead of racism." (In the suburbs.)

The White Ribbon ★★★ Michael Haneke, the harsh, professorial director behind Funny Games and Caché, loves to punish his audience. His latest, which won the Palme D'Or at last year's Cannes Film Festival, is no exception. Filmed in high-contrast black-and-white with Haneke's usual air of viciousness and lack of music, The White Ribbon tells the sad, elliptical tale of a small pre-WWI German town infected with casual sadism. There's something reminiscent of Village of the Damned in Haneke's presentation of the town's children, tormented by their vicious, dictatorial parents until animal abuse and casual acts of torture are practically inevitable. Like his other films, there's a dazzling command of formal cinematic technique in the service of a one-note thesis. Haneke's attempting to depict Nazism in prepubescent form. The White Ribbon is a bit too easy and pleased with itself but still impossible to shake. (In the suburbs.)

POTENT REFILL

Ted Leo melds the personal and political with his punk-fueled pop.

Ted Leo and the Pharmacists play the Paradise Rock Club on April 10.

TED LEO CALLS BOSTON "one of my hometowns." He lived here a decade ago, kicking around the clubs as a solo act that evolved into the Pharmacists, a band that has galvanized a new generation with topical power-pop.

"It's really just flown," 39-year-old Leo says of the past decade, which was preceded by an equal stretch of time in the punk trenches—first with New York hardcore outfits, then the D.C. mod-punk trio Chisel.

"There have never been a lot of long-term goals," says the New Jersey native, who now lives in Rhode Island. "By the time I was playing under my own name, I was really kind of over a lot of it.... Just over all the games and the ideas that you're ever going to make a career out of this. It's been step-by-step, which I think has ultimately proven to be more healthy."

Ted Leo and the Pharmacists have maintained a healthy trajectory despite some stop-and-start steps. The group recorded for two prominent indie labels—Lookout! and Touch and Go—that folded. And when the Pharmacists first went to record their latest songs, they missed a true spark, Leo says. So the band hit the road again.

"We were out there somewhat in the wilderness, just touring for no real reason other than to play music," Leo says from a Minneapolis tour stop. "To re-approach the songs with none of those kinds of pressures hanging over us really re-invigorated us in a weird way."

When the singer/guitarist returned to the studio with drummer Chris Wilson, bassist Marty Key and guitarist/keyboardist James Canty, they came out with a new album, The Brutalist Bricks, sounding as vital as ever. "Even in its angrier moments or whatever," Leo says, "it's imbued with a bit more of the joy of playing."

He and the Pharmacists also found a new home at Matador Records, yet another indie stronghold. "I frankly don't have the time, energy or interest in putting out my own records," Leo says. As for the majors that once courted him, he says, "You can never escape the bottom line working with a major label. I feel there are plenty of people in those organizations who love music, but they get rolled over faster than the bands."

The Brutalist Bricks strikes a balance between edge and accessibility with bracing melodies. It distills Leo's broad influences, which span the Jam, the Clash, the Who, Curtis Mayfield, Billy Bragg, Daft Punk and dub reggae. "Even with the earlier stuff like pub rock and proto-punk, Nick Lowe and Thin Lizzy," he adds, "there was always a real affinity for a hook and melody."

Returning to a four-piece lineup after a few years as a trio, the Pharmacists display wider range with multi-instrumentalist Canty. "You have the opportunity when you go into the studio to flesh things out in different ways," says Leo, whose group plays the Paradise on April 10. "But when we get onstage, it's really like we're a punk band. That's just the energy that happens."

> "When we get onstage, it's really like we're a punk band."

Part of Leo's energetic connection with audiences also comes from his highly charged lyrics. On the new CD, he bridges the playful ("Bottled in Cork," about touring European bars during the Bush era) and the political. "Mourning in America" shares his disgust at race baiting in the last presidential primaries, resurrecting idle "ghosts" from Mississippi to Boston.

"People just wind up exploiting issues for their short-term goals of power gains," Leo says. "You rile people up, and there will be flesh-and-blood consequences."

He suggests that fans react to his lyrics because he reflects both the personal and political, and that he combines them as a matter of course. "It winds up being something that people in their 'How can I make it until 5 o'clock and get home' day can hopefully relate to."

The same goes for him when he takes his music on tour. "If I wasn't able to relate to it, it wouldn't remain fresh. And it is," Leo says. "It's fresh every night." ✖✖✖

X Marks the Spot

Getting Intimate

Listening to The xx's music can feel like eavesdropping on a private conversation. Serenading each other with lyrics that are alternately sultry and mournful, frontwoman Romy Madley Croft and frontman Oliver Sim vent their love pangs in diary-like confessions. Silky synthesized drumbeats and simple grainy guitars are the wind and the waves for this walk on the beach. The band performs at the Paradise on April 2. Tom Samp

BOSTON'S BELOVED BARTENDERS

WHAT MAKES A GREAT BARTENDER?

Is it sheer Cocktail-esque flair with the bottles, an encyclopedic knowledge of potent potions, a simple willingness to go through the credit-card routine for someone with a two-drink tab? We want to know. Pick up a pen and tell us who makes the mixes, pours the pints and sets up the shots that shake and stir your unflagging adoration. Show your appreciation by voting to immortalize your favorite mixologist in our next Beloved Bartenders issue.

Vamping It Up

High Stakes Another vampire saga? Yes, but not what you think. Instead of mopey teenage angst, this tale features a heroine named Abby Normal, a small man with a katana, a fabulous fortune-teller and a monster cat that's terrorizing San Francisco. It's Twilight meets Looney Tunes, for adults only. Christopher Moore presents Bite Me: A Love Story, the final installment in his Bloodsucking Fiends trilogy, on April 2 at Brookline Booksmith.

IMPROPER Sightings!

ATTENTION, BOUNTY HUNTERS! BONUS POINTS TO ANYONE WHO CAN CAPTURE AN IMPROPER READER KEEPING UP WITH THE KENYANS AT THE DEAD SEA ULTRA MARATHON, HELD APRIL 9 IN AMMAN, JORDAN.

Unlike the rest of your friends, we want to see the photos from your next trip. Where did you take us? Send us a picture of you or a buddy, or better yet, someone famous reading THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN and tell us where you were. The wilder your destination and the more creative your photo, the better your chances of making the cut in the esteemed IMPROPER Sightings.

Howard Kogan and Chrissie and Patrick McMahon volunteered in Haiti, where the wintry cover of our "Movies" issue was the closest thing they had to a Coffee Coolatta.

Teresa and Susan Smichenko took us to the Amber Fort in Jaipur, India. Later they visited the Peridot Fort, the Lapis Lazuli Fort and the Faceted Cubic Zirconia Fort.

At the Nairobi Animal Orphanage in Kenya, this kind cheetah decided to adopt Jenn O'Halloran and Katherine Lapre (even though "Improper" readers are hardly an endangered species).

Mayor Harry Tutunjian of Troy, N.Y., fell for our ruse of leaving a big, wooden horse by his gate. When he let it inside, our "Spring Fashion" issue jumped out.

THE RAY TYE MEDICAL AID FOUNDATION
WE WILL NEVER STOP CARING

A LETTER FROM RWANDA

You have a nice welcome note when someone searches for your Foundation. It says

WE NEVER STOP CARING! WHEN YOU SAVE A LIFE YOU SAVE THE FUTURE.

Allow me to congratulate for this mission because you put it in practice, you do not only say it. Today, my objective is to thank you so much for paying my heart surgery.

Mr Tye with Erneste

I would like to be a doctor when I grow up and help other as you helped me. I wish to be a cardiologist, and I will like to come back to the United States for my college education.

I thank you once again for helping me and my God already blessed you.

Thanks.
Erneste.

Dear Erneste,

Thank you for your beautiful note.

YOU ARE THE FUTURE.

I hope that as you grow up you realize that helping someone else is the greatest mission you can have.

God bless you,

Ray Tye

WINEGATE

Ebony and Ivory

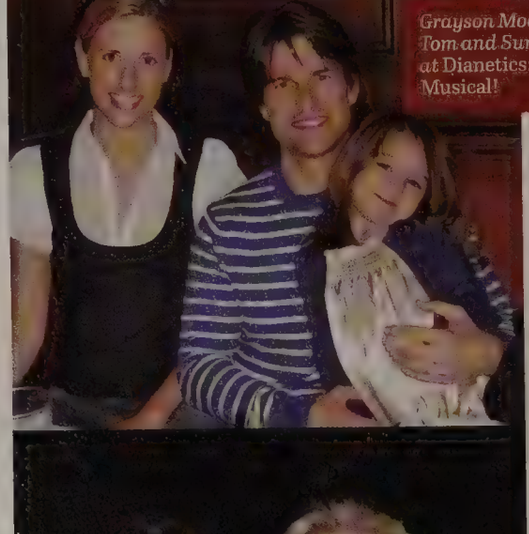
The African Presidential Archives at BU was the setting for a South African wine tasting accompanied by a roundtable moderated by Harvard professor Skip Gates and the cop who arrested him last year, entitled: "Color-coding—Organizational Tool or Slippery Slope to Racism?"

Hosting the event was ambassador Charles Stith, wearing one of his trademark bow ties and welcoming a diverse crowd that included pastor Liz Walker, PR princess Colette Philips, international woman of mystery Doris Yaffe, philanthropist extraordinaire Diddy Cullinane, Rev. Ray and Dr. Gloria White-Hammond, harbor mistress Vivien Li, designer Meichi Peng, über-chef Ming Tsai, über-mensch Barry Schrage, city saviors Ted and Joan Cutler, Chestnut Hillions Tom and Vicky Whitney (aka Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Handasyd Perkins Whitney XIV), Wellesley blueblood Sukey Forbes Bigham, social activist Stephanie Warburg, Governor Deval Patrick and First Lady Diane, senatorial spouse Joan Bennett Kennedy, Cambridge doyenne Ann Gund and one woman who seemed to enjoy a Stellenbosch rosé a bit too much, loudly wondering, "Is it OK to separate whites from colors while doing the laundry? I need to know what to tell my maid.... She's Irish, by the way."

The consensus seemed to be that organizing your wine cellar or clothes closet by color was acceptable, while organizing a game of basketball or mah jong according to hue was not. As for weddings, bar mitzvahs and other festive occasions, it was generally agreed that it was best to keep the WASPs away from the dance floor.

Major-League Matchmaking

Wally the Green Monster not only came out of Fenway, he came out of the closet when 28 Degrees hosted a fund-raiser for Bite the Pillow, a charity that offers support and counseling to gay porn stars past their expiration date.



"It's true: I'm as gay as I am green," said the beloved Red Sox mascot, to a crowd that included the ubiquitous Hat Sisters, Colombian cutie Ricardo Rodriguez and his husband, Michael Kelley, silver fox Tim Leahy, Hizzonah Tom Menino, city councilor Mike Ross, real estate magnate David Whitman, professional party boy Chris "Tobie" Tobeck, unstoppable lap dancer David Anthony Frampton, theater impresario Ryan Landry, drag divas Verna Turbulence and Ms. Kris Knevil, Boston's fairy godfathers Harry Collings and Dan Mullin, the super-dee-duper dapper Tony Corey and CJ Menard, TV news studs Randy Price and David Brown, a guy who bid $10,000 in the live auction for one of Elton John's toupees and someone else who bid $28,000, sight unseen, for whatever is in the top drawer of Neil Patrick Harris' nightstand.

Wally the Green Monster at Bite the Pillow

The Hat Sisters at Bite the Pillow

Grayson Moore and Tom and Suri Cruise at Dianetics: The Musical!

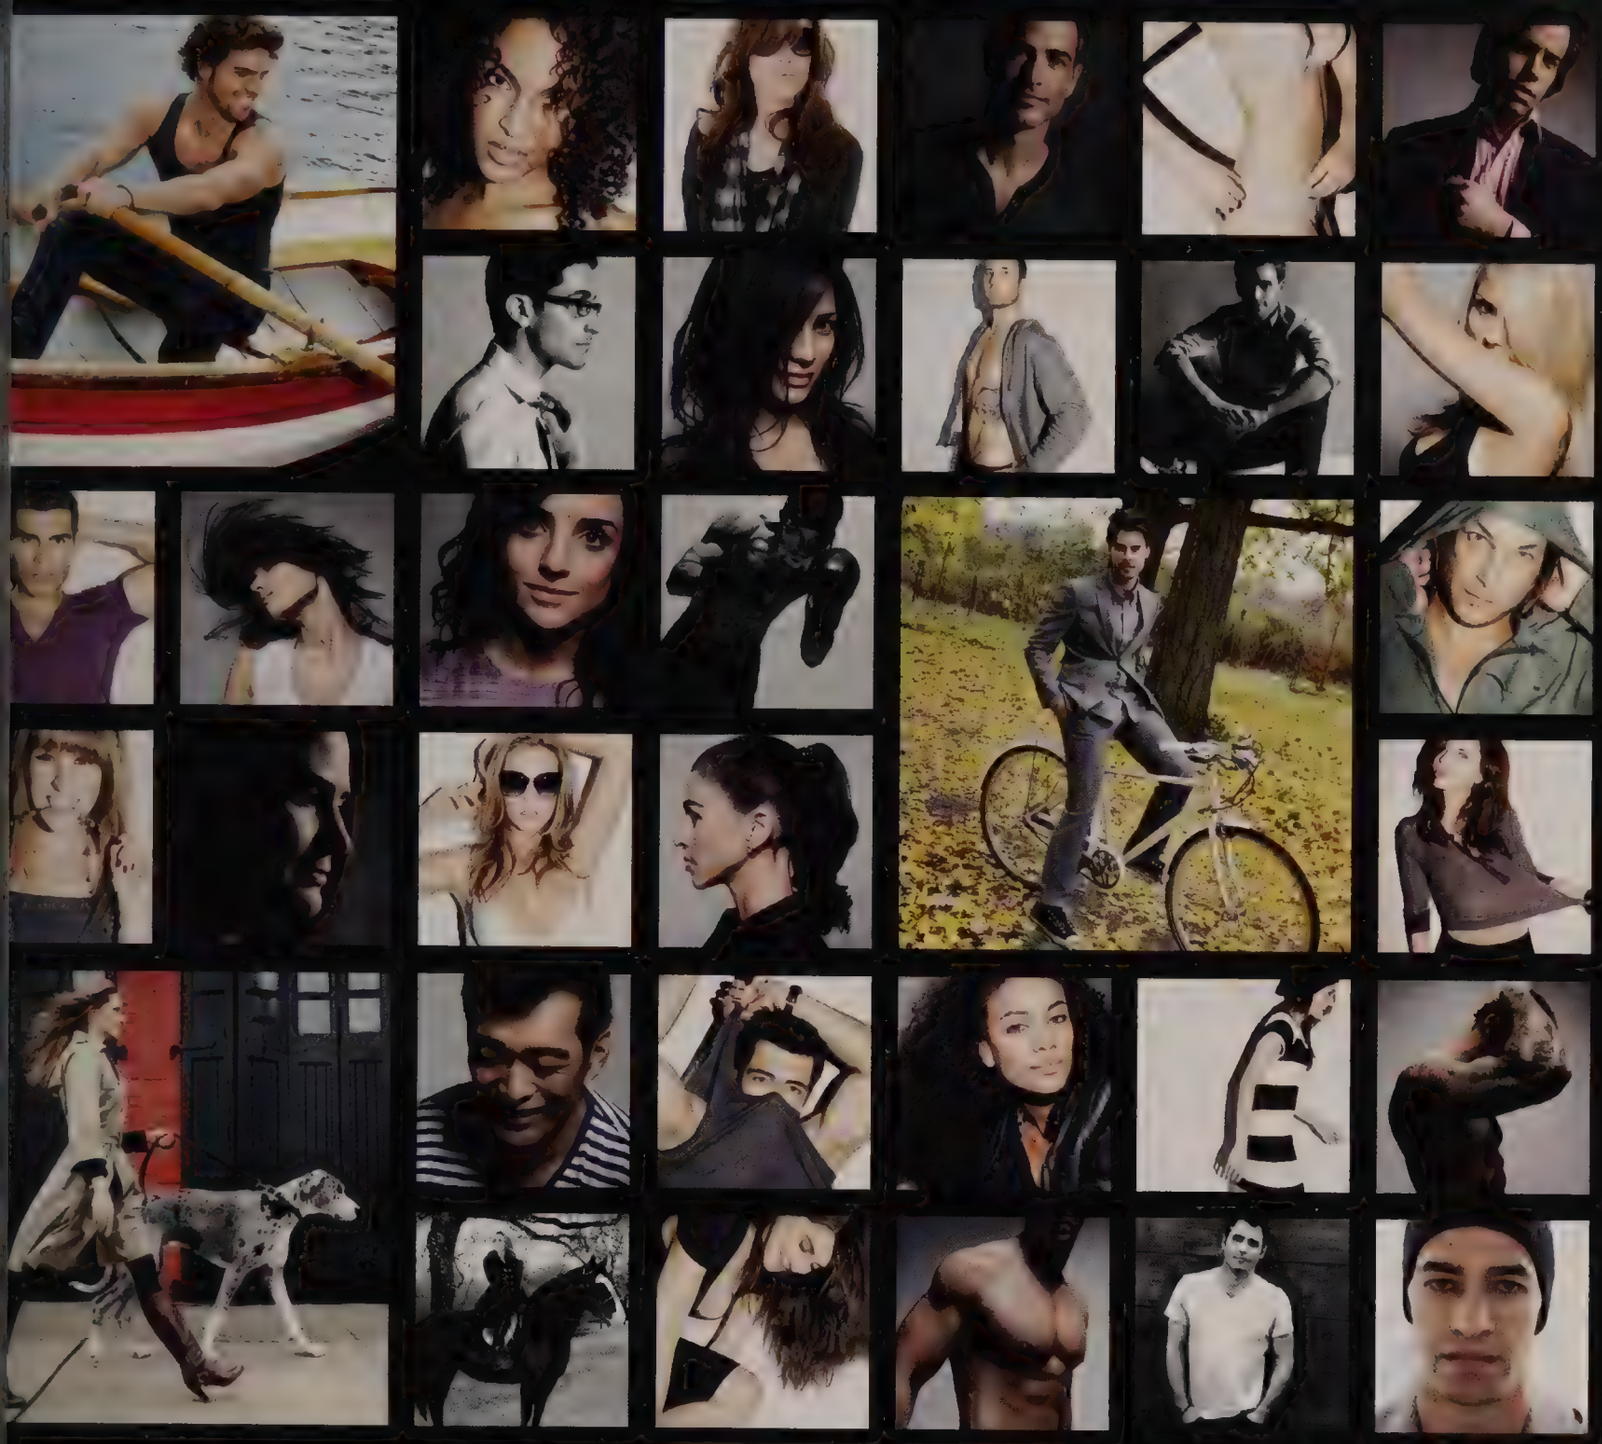
Colette Philips and Mary Kakas at the wine tasting

But it was Wally who stole the show, prompting one guest to say, "I can see the ad on Manhunt now: 6'5" bear, green fur, seeks cub for long-term relationship. Must love sports."

To which someone else added: "Maybe Captain Jolly Roger's single. After all, isn't Pittsburgh where Queer as Folk is set?"

TomGray?

The big surprise at the opening night of the Huntington Theater's Dianetics: The Musical! wasn't the play itself, which elicited mixed reactions ranging from "intriguingly jejeune" to "WTF?" to "Can I have the last two and a half hours of my life back?"



Stealing the spotlight, and redirecting it into the audience, was the executive producer: megawatt movie star Tom Cruise. Spotting the diminutive actor by himself would normally be enough to set Bostonians atwitter (and tweeting like mad). Seeing him with his adorable little moppet, Suri, was enough to make one fan (Sal Malafronte, you know who you are) literally wet himself with excitement. But the biggest news/scandal of the evening: It seems that TomKat is a thing of the past, since Cruise was quite clearly canoodling with ver married Back Bay beauty Grayson Moore (whose husband, Alec Stern, was nowhere to be seen).

Speculating on the new couple, Huntington artistic director Peter Dubois said, "You kn his demographic is starting to skew a little older, and I think his manager wanted him t be connected to someone a bit younger than Katie Holmes."

"So why did he have to switch to a blonde who's 10 inches taller than he is?" asked another guest. "He's gonna need stilts to kee up with her."

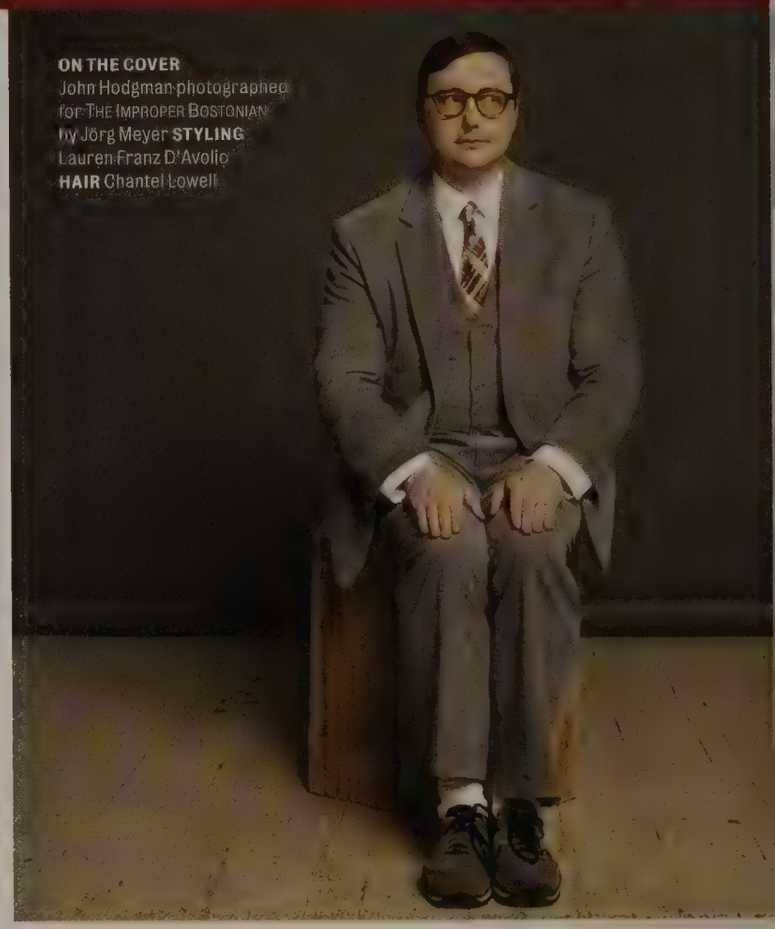
Having a Moment

My son recently learned to walk, a milestone marked by a pair of snappy Stride Rite sneakers. Despite the investment ($50 less for college), he still seems happiest in bare feet, toddling through life on his ham hocks, which could hide a Cheerio in their fat ripples. He's so yummy.

Turns out, his disdain for shoes might reveal a biological tendency. The barefoot-running movement has gained traction in recent years with the development of Vibram FiveFingers, Nike Free and the like. For our "Man Issue," Ezra Dyer tests these products and the theory that modern sneakers impede our natural stride.



But back to ham hocks, the real kind. Meat continues its culinary reign, with local chefs embracing nose-to-tail cooking and charcuterie seeming as commonplace as calamari. Andrew Rimas, whose book Empires of Food hits shelves in June, investigates pig's popularity.

Another author graces the cover: PC personifier John Hodgman, a famous minor television personality. That's his own description. What a babe magnet.

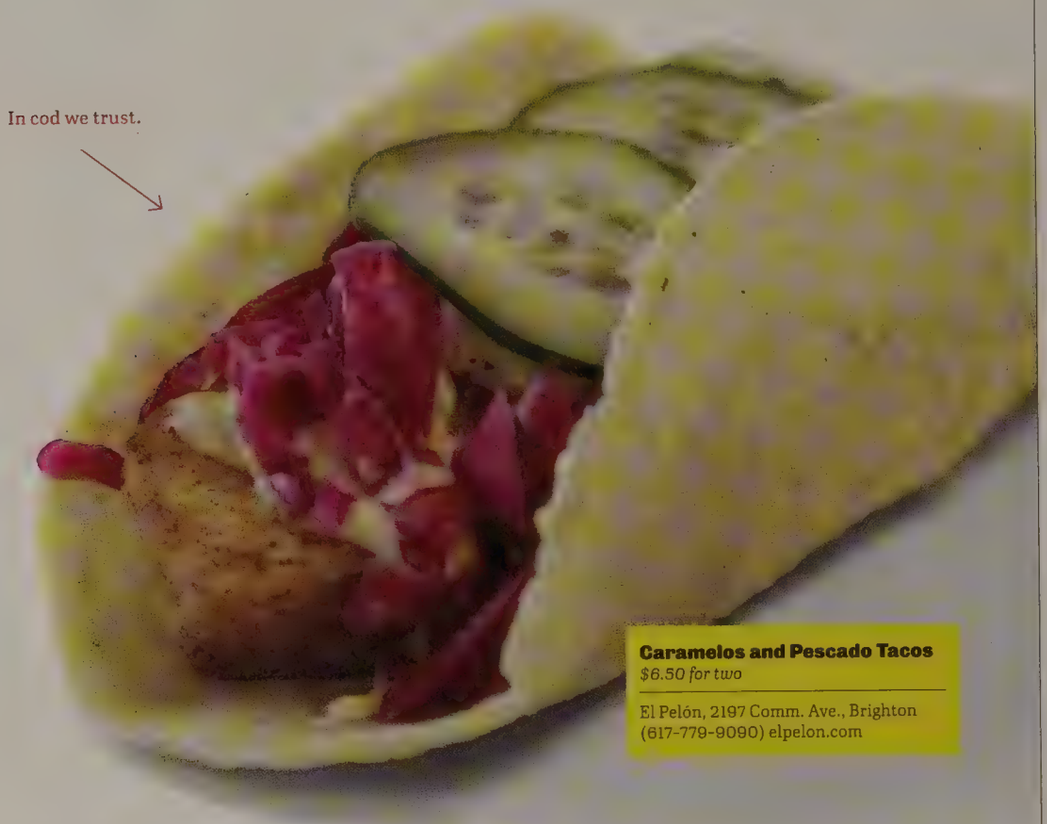
SIGNATURE STYLE



BELMONT SALON owner Leon de Magistris, father of local restaurateurs Dante, Filippo and Damian, doesn't believe in using unnecessary force when styling his customers. "You can only do so much with somebody's hair," de Magistris says with a sigh. In the category of interventions he wishes people would avoid combovers, toupees and weaves. Despite advocating a natural look, his most high-profile client was a man famed for his rigid style—former governor Michael Dukakis. "I keep telling him to relax a little, to mess it up," de Magistris says, although he adds, "The governor's hair does what [it does] very well." It's easy.

Nothing against Boston College dining services, but the competition just got a lot stiffer. Last month, the Eagles welcomed Fenway's beloved—and twice fire-stricken—taqueria to the neighborhood with lines out the door. Owner Jim Hoben's followers will recall house special tacos—most notably, cornmeal-crusted cod with chile mayo and pickled vegetables, and charred steak-and-cheese with hot sauce, fresh salsa and guacamole. Wash them down with Mexican cane-sugar Coke. ELIZABETH BOMZE

FIRST, ARTICULATE WHY people should support you, explain how hard you're working toward your goal and express your commitment to the cause. Second, don't feel embarrassed about asking people for money, because it's not for you. Showing people that they can help support you and a good cause is a very effective way to fund-raise. Finally, reach out broadly to friends, family and classmates. Our runners learn fund-raising as a life skill—no matter who you are, it's important to know how to find resources.

TO THE CITIZEN WHO SIDE-SWIPED MY GIRLFRIEND'S BRAND NEW CAR IN SOUTH BOSTON ON MARCH 23:
Leaving a note would've been the right thing to do. I'm a firm believer that you get what you give, and what goes around comes around. I'm sure that this will come back to you in spades. I can only hope that your car looks equally as busted as her Maxima's passenger-side doors now do. If you manage to discover some integrity and would like to pay the deductible for the damage you caused, contact The Improper for my information.

Disappointed and displeased in Boston

To the owner of the black Toyota Camry parked at Gold's Gym in Southie on March 24:
As I pulled into the spot next to yours, I noticed a dog in your car. I was horrified someone had left their dog in their car while they worked out, but I thought, "Maybe they are just running in and out." When I left the gym 45 minutes later, the dog was still in the car. I went to the management to see if they would make an announcement, but they claimed they couldn't. Well, guess what? I can. Hey, asshole! Think of the lifestyle you live and how it may not be conducive to owning and caring for a dog. Did your parents leave you in the car when you were little so they could work out? You should be ashamed of yourself and have your dog taken away. CC

To Evan:
I was leaving Great Scott on Friday, March 12, with my two tipsy friends, when you invited us to a party. You helped me walk the girls over and ran interference with your friends to make sure they were safe. I know I can't ever thank you enough. You were so amazing! I just want you to know, if I hadn't been so worried about my friends, I would've remembered to give you my phone number before I left. TL

SPRING FORWARD
A seasonal approach

Full Bloom

When devising their first restaurant, many chefs think toward future tangibles: a dish displaying their style, the desired accolades in newsprint. Keith Pooler's driving force was nostalgia, and his goal was a specific sense of place—a feeling sometimes overlooked in an industry where sensations are normally centered on the stomach.

At Bergamot, Pooler hopes to recreate the atmosphere of Brooklyn's River Café, the restaurant that launched Charlie Palmer and David Burke, and where he began his career. "It was exactly what I wanted, and everything I chased after didn't seem as fulfilling," explains Pooler, formerly at Harvest and Scampo. The focus was on great products, and the vibe was one of shared passions, where work never felt like labor. After two weeks of construction and an April 1 opening, the atmosphere he envisioned appears to be intact.

Bergamot's menu contains some playful touches, like an appetizer called Duck, Duck, Duck ($11)—an ode to an item prepared by the building's previous tenant, EVOO—featuring duck paillard stacked with cured duck and a Peking-duck crackling. Under the both nebulous and trendy label of "progressive American," Bergamot's dishes will change with whims and seasons. The pea shoots, ramps, asparagus and muscat grapes signal spring's arrival.

BASHO BRINGS IT ON

"Brasserie" doesn't mean French here.

GIVING BOSTONIANS their first experience with a Japanese brasserie, Basho is set to open one block from Fenway Park with a three-pronged menu approach: sushi, raw bar and glass-enclosed robata grill. Basho's sushi features intriguing elements such as chardonnay gelée and house-made, organic tofu purée; the raw bar's offerings are accented with traditional flavors of yuzu, shiso, soy and wasabi; and the robata charcoal grill turns out bamboo-skewered delicacies including pork belly, chicken skin and gingko nut.

Previously at Uni, chef Youji Iwakura melds East and West in dishes like foie-gras teriyaki and lobster-miso bouillabaisse. The large space incorporates private and communal dining areas, plus a seasonal patio with retractable awning. Note: There's nothing French about "brasserie" here; the term denotes a style of relaxed, pub-style dining.

TWO NEW CHANGES to what we used to call fusion cuisine: DaVinci Restaurant is introducing Indian-Italian dishes—masala agnolotti and rigatoni alla Peppino with shrimp, pancetta and cumin—while Newbury Street newcomer Mumbai Chopstix will specialize in Indian-Chinese fare. The 60-seat cafe will serve a mélange of Chinese and Indian flavors, such as Calcutta-style shrimp in Szechwan sauce, in woks with chopsticks.

CONGRATULATIONS to three Boston-area tastemakers who've been nominated for a James Beard Award in the best chef Northeast category: Michael Leviton of Lumière, Tony Maws of Craigie on Main and Marc Orfaly of Pigalle.

FINALLY, the forthcoming Towne Stove & Spirits has a big name on board: Lydia Shire. The more we hear, the more we look forward to this project's opening.

Affordable Luxury. It's still in the cards.

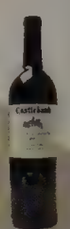
Wine

Big Boys



Full-bodied reds are a breed apart. These love-them-or-leave-them wines are, perhaps, most appealing when masses of rich, berry-fruit flavor are present to balance bruising levels of alcohol and tannin. Not exactly sippers, they work well as accompaniments to hearty meat, cheese and fish preparations. Warm climates produce the best results, allowing the thick-skinned grapes to ripen sufficiently. Hence northern California and some of the Southern Hemisphere countries currently in vogue (the hug is especially tight around the waist of Argentina). The following blind-tasting winners show off the style at good price points.

MASTER OF WINE SANDY BLOCK IS VICE PRESIDENT OF BEVERAGE OPERATIONS FOR LEGAL SEA FOODS.

Huntington Petite Sirah CALIFORNIA, 2007 ($13, Southie Liquors). 2007 was a magic vintage for California reds: ripe, but balanced and nuanced. This wine is an exemplar, delivering power and concentrated blueberry-like intensity, with a softer mouth feel than normally expected from this sometimes-rustic, opaque-colored grape. Although reviewed within the last year, it's even more delicious now. The cherry and black plum are still omnipresent, but the tannins have subsided. It's ideal with braised short ribs.

Castlebank "Old Vines" Zinfandel DRY CREEK VALLEY, 2007 ($17, Newtonville Wine). Another fabulous '07, this is a more restrained, polished style of zin, with alcohol levels that seem positively slimmed down today at 14.7 percent. Its lush, ripe black-fruit flavors show a hint of raisin and "old vine" authority without coming across as overblown or excessively "hot." Dry Creek Valley is one of my favorite sources of this quintessentially California-style wine, and Castlebank is one of the best-priced options from that elite corner of Sonoma. Try it with a rare tuna steak.

Bodega Goulart R "Reserva" LUJAN DE CUYO, ARGENTINA, 2007 ($16, Boscy's Liquors, Saugus). This delicious, well-structured mix of 60 percent malbec and 40 percent cabernet sauvignon, from one of Argentina's greatest high-elevation growing districts, is an absolute steal. With the recent runaway popularity of malbec, its origins in Bordeaux, where it forms part of a blend, are easy to forget. Made from grapes grown 2,500 to 3,000 feet above sea level, this beauty has a lovely chocolate-accented blackberry flavor that coats the palate and lingers into a spicy clove-like finish. Regarding food, this is rare-steak territory.

THE RUNDOWN

The adage holds that a marathon is 90 percent mental, 10 percent physical. In other words, a mind game. We guess what amateur runners are thinking on the trek from Hopkinton to Copley Square.

Start Feeling nervous. My palms are sweatier than Youk's forehead.

Mile 1 It'll be a cold day in hell before I stoop to using nipple lube.

Mile 2 Port-o-potties are magnificent. Or they would be if I could find one.

Mile 4 Sick of talking to this woman. If only I could outrun her.

Mile 5 That guy with dreadlocks ought to get a job as a lawn sprinkler.

Mile 6 So many booty shorts. Is everyone taking fashion cues from Scott Brown?

Mile 10 Regurgitated spaghetti. Yum.

Mile 12 Screaming Wellesley girls everywhere. Why yes, that's vomit on my chest.

Mile 13 Someone should tell that guy tutus aren't aerodynamic.

Mile 14 WWAKD? (What Would a Kenyan Do?)

Mile 15 I'm so runner's high.

Mile 17 Goodbye, toenails.

Mile 20 Aaaand I just peed myself.

Mile 21 Ironically, my heart is the one muscle I can't feel breaking right now.

Mile 22 Oh, there it goes.

Mile 23 Damn you, Publick House. You mock me with your Belgian beauties.

Mile 24 Crap, it definitely wasn't water in that Solo cup.

Mile 25 Really should've gone with the nipple lube.

Mile 26 Ryan Hall is my bitch!

Post-Race Foil is, in fact, also magnificent.

Drink of the Moment

PRIOR ENGAGEMENT

Skipping out of work early to hit the pub takes balls. At 4 pm, the Biltmore's horseshoe-shaped bar is crowded with craftsmen craning their necks to catch sports on TVs, their roaring voices made gruffer with each drink's measure of dehydration. Maybe they're swigging a craft beer or a lager. Perhaps taking a draw from the two-gallon jar of house-made Old Fashioned mix. Drink efficiency is very manly.

Apparently, so is wildflower honey syrup. A year after its redesign, this rumored former speakeasy is now pulling Boston's burgeoning cocktail scene into Newton Upper Falls. Leading the charge is GM Mike Stankovich, an enthusiast who emptied the liquor store across the street of bitters when news of the Angostura shortage hit and scoured eBay for the perfect copper mugs for his Moscow Mules.

One of the Biltmore's new spring originals is the MONASTERY ($9). Made with Hendrick's, St-Germain, yellow chartreuse, lemon juice, bitters and the aforementioned honey syrup, this sunny, clean-shaven cocktail has punch. More than a distraction from the taps, it's something to sip with other men on a mission.

LARGER THAN LIFE

Just try to keep up.

ON THE BIG-SCREEN TV OF modern life, we participate in a world that has become throbbingly outsized and exaggerated. In her new book, psychologist Deirdre Barrett investigates how primal instincts—appropriately designed for hunters and gatherers thousands of years ago—have lost pace with today's reality. Nobel laureate Niko Tinbergen named this disconnect "supernormal stimuli." Applying the phenomenon to our charged environment, Barrett shares academic research, including the landmark experiment in which songbirds abandoned their own modest eggs in favor of DayGlo dummies so big they slid off.

We humans are just as disturbing. False "cuteness," the sloth-producing boob tube—not to mention enhanced breasts—capture us and define disturbing illusions we accept as real. Online social networking, for all its connectivity, also can distort, compromise, even replace live relationships. Barrett explores and deplores "McHunters and McGatherers," and the ways we passively trudge toward obesity, diabetes and too-early death—energy drinks with five kinds of sugar, a Starbucks Frappuccino with 870 calories. To these horror scenarios, she offers countervailing scientific and moral proposals that suggest the possibility of balance and restraint. ×××

Supernormal Stimuli

by Deirdre Barrett

"In a world increasingly designed to stimulate hunger, sexual arousal and acquisitiveness, chasing the supernormal is a losing game. It's not antihedonistic to rein in, or redirect, instincts. Our pleasure system is robust and very flexible. Scientific studies show that people experience similar levels of happiness long-term regardless of external events. People in the poorest nations are a couple percentage points less happy than those in the most affluent. People who drink, don't drink, watch TV, don't watch TV, eat natural vegetables, eat junk food—all experience similar levels of life satisfaction."

NICE SURPRISE

Ducali as the new North End hangout

ANY WAY YOU SLICE IT Antipasto misto starts the evening at this inviting pizzeria.

WHAT A DELIGHTFUL place. Within easy walking distance of TD Garden, Ducali serves antipasti, panini, salads and pizzas to sports fans and concertgoers alike. But the food's quality makes this more than an indifferent refueling spot.

Occupying a modest storefront by the Charlestown Bridge, Ducali's pleasant interior accommodates 58 diners at short tables, tall communal settings and a commodious bar. A high, beamed ceiling creates a sense of spaciousness, while two large flat-screens provide a view from any seat in the house.

My first visit started on a high note when I chose the antipasto sott'olio ($6.50), grilled vegetables drizzled with extra-virgin olive oil and served on a small pizza paddle. An antidote to the bitter temperature outside, the zucchini summoned up the flavors of summer. Earthy portobello mushrooms, mildly smoky eggplant and plump kalamata olives complete this marvelous quartet. Next came an order of calamari arrabiata ($8.50), a mountain of squid rings and tentacles freshly fried to a perfect crunch. Hot peppers enlivened the dish, though the accompanying tomato sauce, bereft of herbs, added little.

Another winner, the antipasto misto ($8) let the ingredients speak for themselves. Ultrathin slices of imported prosciutto achieved a perfect balance of salty and sweet, while shavings of Parmigiano Reggiano lived up to this king of cheese's reputation. Garlicky salami, also in impeccably thin slices, added dimension, but mild provolone was nothing more than a somewhat bland foil.

Charles' Picks

Antipasto sott'olio

Nachos Italiano

Margherita

Espresso gelato

Ducali's nachos Italiano ($6.50) could become a mainstay of the bar-food genre. Essentially a large bowl of pizza chopped into bite-size pieces, it combined savory sausage, creamy mozzarella, and an alternatively crisp and chewy crust, making it an excellent accompaniment to one of the 10 draft beers. However, the last two antipasti, carciofi ($8) and pirurette ($6), disappointed. The former—half a small artichoke the menu described as "grilled"—apparently had the life steamed out of it. A tiny bowl of uninspired aioli provided no resuscitation. The pirurette—dry, boring fried-mozzarella lollipops—didn't profit from insipid tomato marmalade. Far better, chosen from the five offered panini ($8-$9.50), was rustic scali bread piled high with prosciutto and provolone.

The selection of pizzas began with a straightforward margherita ($8, individual; $15, large). Though my companions pronounced this their favorite, I much preferred the tre porcellini ($11; $21), loaded with salami, pancetta and sausage, a carnivore's delight bound with gooey cheese. Equally hearty was the pizza ripiena ($10; $19), a calzone stuffed with sausage, ricotta and mozzarella. The melanzane, funghi e zucchini ($8.50; $16) replicated the antipasto sott'olio in fine fashion. Note to the calorie-conscious: The individual size is aptly named if the individual is an interior lineman.

Ducali's more than two-dozen wines range in price from $20–$40. The Santa Julia Malbec ($21), fruity but well structured, matched well with the antipasti, while the Lini 910 Lambrusco ($27), a sparkling, reasonably dry red, dispelled the notion that all Lambruscos are sickeningly sweet. For dessert, a small cup of espresso gelato ($5) had deep, full-bodied flavor, while the sugheri, a trio of tiny chocolate cake "corks," came in a pool of pastry cream.

Service at Ducali was part of its charm. Three waitresses were graceful, cheerful and efficient. Combined with the food's value and taste, Ducali feels less like a routine eatery and more like a new neighborhood haunt. ×××

HIGH SCORE

On March 7, the Ellie Fund held the state's only Oscar night party sanctioned by the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences. Some 400 people gathered at the Langham Boston to watch the live telecast; they raised $100,000 for the fund's Care for the Caregiver program, easing stress on families battling cancer.

The Boston Bruins Foundation celebrated the 40th anniversary of the team's 1970 Stanley Cup victory with a party at TD Garden on March 18. Some 450 people—including Bruins alum Bobby Orr, who scored the winning goal, current players, management and fans—attended and raised $100,000 for the charity.

HOT BODS

Yoga is hard. Yoga in 99 degrees is harder.

LIKE MANY PEOPLE, I'M suspicious of yoga. The whole premise—getting a workout by standing in one spot and slowly changing postures—seems like a scam invented by lazy people. Yeah, man, you don't need to lift heavy weights or harsh your mellow by actually running somewhere. In fact, you want to breathe even slower than usual! Right on, right on. Hey, is that yoga mat made of reclaimed hemp? It'd be a lot cooler if it were.

As a manly man, I know that workouts require iron plates, complicated machines and lots of screaming. (The screaming is how you let everyone at the gym know your Stacker Juice Muscle Blaster Shake is kicking in.) Yoga is something that happens at Healthworks. I probably do yoga by accident while sitting on the couch watching TV.

If you think this skepticism is leading toward an admission that yoga kicked my ass, you'd be wrong. I tried yoga, and I won. By which I mean, I didn't black out or invent a new pose called Throw-Up Man.

Let me set the scene. I'm down in North Carolina, where my sister-in-law, Elena, cajoles me into going with her to a hot yoga class. I don't know why she's so bent on bringing me, but I can only assume that, like most women, she wants to see this body in action. Can't say I blame her.

For you non-yoga people, hot yoga is like regular yoga except that it's hot. As in, there's a heater in the room that keeps everything at 99 degrees. When Elena and I walk into the studio, it's clear that I'm the newbie. For one thing, I'm the only one wearing shorts. It turns out there's a reason you don't wear shorts for yoga. Actually, a couple of reasons.

And I'm one of only two guys in the class. Thankfully, the other guy isn't wearing shorts. The women are all over the map, age-wise, but they have one thing in common: good bods. They must all hit the gym pretty hard when they get out of yoga class.

We begin by lying down and breathing. I'm quite a pro at this, as I do it every night when I fall asleep. The instructor goes around and gives everyone a little shoulder massage. So far, I love hot yoga. I'm thinking about how studly I'll be if I can make it though this without even sweating. I bet I can.

Next we start with the poses. We basically do a pushup, stand up and twist sideways, then do a squat, kind of. I can't complete some of the moves, because they require ridiculous feats of flexibility, like touching your toes.

Also, I don't know the names, so each of my positions includes a pose I call, "Staring at the Teacher and Trying to Decipher How She's Doing That." Along the way, she gives instructions like, "Modified Cowabunga into a Sleeping Sasquatch and then into a Nubile Woodland Elf, if you can do it." You know that Photoshop illustration of a guy sticking his head up his own butt? That's actually a yoga move. It's called the Terrible Ostrich.

As the class progresses, a bead of sweat emerges on my forehead. It soon turns into gushing rivulets that pour down and soak my yoga mat. Since I'm borrowing a house mat, I wonder how many gallons of stranger-sweat coat this thing. Under normal circumstances, I'd be preoccupied by the grossness of that thought, but for the moment I'm more focused on not passing out.

I've had heatstroke once before, at baseball camp at Brandeis, running sprints on the baking-hot artificial turf. Right now, I'm starting to get the same sort of feeling—lightheadedness, with the edge of my vision going a bit fuzzy. Meanwhile, to my left, there's an 80-year-old woman who's basically doing handstands. She's clearly trying to intimidate me, but I won't be chased out of here by some cocky octogenarian. I'll persevere and get into a Bird of Paradise, even if it's the last thing I do before blacking out.

And I do reach the point of serious queasiness. Fortunately, we're ready to go into the Savasana cool-down mode. We get cold towels and more massages. I'm absolutely soaking wet with sweat. I feel disoriented and confused. I confess that yoga is harder than I thought. But right now I'd probably confess to anything. I was the second shooter on the grassy knoll. Just make the mean ladies stop.

So, am I a convert? I don't think so. If I want to be in uncomfortable proximity to a bunch of sweaty people, I'll ride the Green Line this summer. But if you decide to give hot yoga a try, my only advice is to bring your own mat. Because, trust me, you don't want to end up with mine. ×××

NOVEL IDEAS

Desperately seeking writerly advice

IT'S BEEN SAID THAT WE ALL have a novel in us, and maybe it's true. Over the years, dozens of people have told me so. They've offered unwanted opinions on my own writing and, worse, have asked me to read their manuscripts and give tips on finding an agent or a publisher. I have a four-foot pile of pages in my office right now. I call it my "freebie file." Fragments of novels, memoirs, poetry, all from good people seeking praise and a home for their inspirations. Even published authors are incredibly needy and eager for celebrity blurbs on their book jackets. My late friend, the great writer Bob Parker, would say to people seeking his words for their work, "Sure, I'll give you a quote. But you choose. I can read your book or give you a quote. Your call." Cynical? Yes. Realistic? Absolutely. I guarantee that every time you see glorious praise from Bob on the back of a book, the authors being plugged made the same choice. Me, too.

When people tell me about their desire to write because of their amazing lives, I say, "Tonight is Thursday. By Monday morning, give me 700 words on the subject of love. It should be easy for you." I've been making this offer for more than 30 years, and I've yet to receive a single word. It takes guts and endurance to write. Saying this, I'm a sucker for writers and an unabashed fan, in particular, of novelists. So when acquaintances ask me to read their work, or their kid's, or their aunt's, I always agree to take a look. The most amazing people have brought me their babies to read, hundreds of them. Among the most memorable was a young student at Boston English, who insisted on being called "Adrian Cathcart," affected a monocle and claimed ties to his hero Oscar Wilde. Adrian was writing an epic poem about creation, which he described as "500 glorious pages of iambic pentameter." He was a brilliant, obnoxious little jerk, his snobbery masking all kinds of issues. I introduced Adrian to a publisher, who gave him a contract at age 18 for his talent and promise. But he dropped out of school, moved to Manhattan and disappeared forever.

Around the same time, my wife and I were out for dinner in Boston. My first novel had just been published, and we were talking about its reception. Out of nowhere, a short man on the heavy side with mounds of bouncy, blond hair pulled up a chair and sat down. "I've loved your wife from afar for two years," he said, "and I've written a novel that you can help me get published." This began a multiyear friendship with a psychiatrist, Dr. David Viscott. He was mad in all the good ways—funny, tortured, talented—and a fine diagnostician. We'd call him with every ailment, and he'd nail it. David got his first novel published, then followed it with a big best seller, The Making of a Psychiatrist. He moved to Los Angeles to become a pop shrink to the stars with radio and TV shows, paving the way for Dr. Phil and others. After pushing his way into our lives, David had this advice: "No one is going to do it for your career. You gotta have chutzpa, be pushy. Even if it hurts."

Of the many manuscripts I've received, these two, and one other, were the only attempts that actually had a shot at getting published. But it's amazing how many people put the time and energy into taking a whack at it. Hence, why I find it hard to say, 'No. I'm a writer, not an editor." All writers need some help as they struggle to find their voices and their audiences. On the not-so-helpful side, there are those who feel that writing is somehow not a legitimate way to make a living, and thus feel free to openly criticize an author. No one would tell a lawyer or a doctor or an electrician, "Hated your last appearance in court," or "Heard you took out the wrong kidney," or "Boy did you blow our friends' sound system." But people have told me, "Your last book was a pitiful example" and "I could never give a book of yours to my children. The language..." Or, my favorite, from an old Brahmin woman: "What a terrible writer," she said, right before asking me to do a big favor for her. You never know.

Then something wonderful happens. I have a young friend, Cort McMeel, who grew up in Beacon Hill. From the time Cort was 12, he told me he wanted to be a writer. Encouragement to a young writer is one thing, positive reinforcement, if you're honest about it, can be a major motivator. But the budding author has to have big-time fire in the belly. Cort will have his first novel published by St. Martin's Press in 2010, about the world of commodity traders. It's wild. And we should all walk on that side sometimes. ×××

The School of Sports { RICH LEVINE }

ON RUNNING, BOOZE, WAKE AND PAPI

5 APRIL EVENTS

4/14: The NHL Playoffs Begin As I write, the Bruins have yet to clinch their spot. But really, does it even matter? Seidenberg's season-ender was the icing on this dungcake of a year, one that kicked off with bad luck and injuries, and will finish with more of the same.

4/17: The NBA Playoffs Begin I'm dying to hear Rasheed Wallace's interview after the C's first playoff loss. "No, no, you guys got it all wrong. I said we were saving ourselves for NEXT year's playoffs!" Listen, I'll give Sheed credit; he's been much better in the second half. But if the C's crap the bed, he's the biggest fall guy, making for an uncomfortable and unfortunate next couple years.

FINAL SPRINT? Pierce has drive

4/19: Kenyan Pride Day If you're going to watch this year's Boston Marathon, I've got some tips on the right. If you're running the marathon, then, well, um… maybe some green M&Ms can boost your performance? Or does that only work in Little League?

4/22–4/24: The NFL Draft The draft was one of the greatest weekends on the calendar, but thanks to ESPN's unrelenting quest to take the fun out of watching sports, this year's event will be televised on Thursday and Friday night. Sweet. Although it should help confirm the rumor that Mel Kiper's hair actually morphs into a live ferret at sundown.

4/16–4/23: Birthday Bonanza Bill Belichick turns 58 on April 16. Terry Francona turns 51 on April 22, and Claude Julien turns the big 5-0 on April 23. If you're in a giving mood, here's what each guy needs. For Belichick: a new RB, preferably Fresno State's Ryan Mathews. For Tito: a trade for Mike Lowell. (That situation's going to get much worse before it gets better.) And for Julien: a new address. Sorry, Claude, but you've lost them. It's time to move on.

ONE MAGIC NUMBER

2 QUESTIONS FOR DAVID ORTIZ

David, how was lunch today?
[Expletive], dawg! You really gonna ask about my mother [expletive] lunch? I went to [expletive] Sonic, man. And you know what? That [expletive] was backed up, all the [expletive] way down Route 1! And my [expletive] tots got cold!

Yo, Papi, you catch Dancing With the Stars last night?
[Expletive] that [expletive], dawg! My [expletive] DVR got all [expletive] crazy. [Expletive] crazy like that Kate Gosselin, man. She's a bigger bitch than a mother [expletive] right-thumb injury!

3 Marathon Viewing Tips

Go Early or Don't Go at All You want to be a part of the marathon experience. In fact, as a loyal Bostonian, it's basically your duty. So get up, and get after it early. Otherwise, you'll just end up sober and annoyed. Don't you spend enough time feeling that way?

Don't Get Greedy If you're going to the Sox game, just concede the fact that you're not making it to the finish line. Seriously, it's not worth it. Unless you've ever watched the movie City Slickers and thought to yourself, "Man, what I'd give to be one of those cows!"

Calm Your Boozy Inspiration At some point—after you've had a few too many (plus three or four)—you'll see the runners triumphantly crossing the finish line, overcome with joy and pride. You'll start to get an urge to turn to your friends and drunkenly scream, "That's it! I'm running next year!" Don't. They'll know you're lying.

RANKING THE EAST'S 4 TITLE CONTENDERS

1. Cleveland Cavaliers Fact 1: LeBron wants to leave Cleveland. Fact 2: He'll only leave if he wins a title first. Connect the dots and the rest of the Eastern Conference is out of luck. Unless…

2. Boston Celtics That's assuming the C's nab the No. 3 seed, and I still think they can do it. I know that sounds crazy, and I'm prepared to look stupid, but seriously, why can't they put together one last run? Oh right, they're old, slow and unfocused. But I don't care. Just say it with me: Yes, we can! (I've got that copyrighted.)

3. Orlando Magic Until Dwight Howard can go an entire game without giggling like a 10-year-old who just saw boobs for the first time, I can't take Orlando seriously. Yeah, I know, they did it last year, but that was with Hedo Turkoglu, who has a killer instinct that Vince Carter can only imagine.

4. Atlanta Hawks Their dominance over the C's is undeniable, but so is their combined 1-6 record (at press) vs. the Cavs and Magic. Not to mention the fact that Joe Johnson is dealing with a right-thumb injury that (as we learned with Paul Pierce) can be a bigger bitch than Kate Gosselin.

Soroff On JOHN HODGMAN

The funny guy opines on nerd-dom, prehensile tails and Chester A. Arthur.

SATIRIST, AUTHOR AND ACTOR JOHN HODGMAN, 39, was born and raised in Brookline. Hodgman studied clarinet and viola at the All Newton Music School, graduated from Brookline High and earned an undergraduate degree from Yale. A former literary agent, he's the author of the popular books The Areas of My Expertise and More Information Than You Require, as well as articles in The Paris Review, Wired and The New York Times Magazine. Hodgman is perhaps most recognizable from the Apple computer ads (sadly, said to have an expiration date) and appearances on such TV programs as the Daily Show With Jon Stewart. He has also appeared on Battlestar Galactica and served as the keynote speaker at the 2009 Radio and Television Correspondents Dinner, sharing the dais with President Obama. Hodgman lives with his wife and two children in Brooklyn, N.Y.

Jonathan Soroff: Is it true what I've heard about you and Lady Gaga?
John Hodgman: I don't have a penis, yes.

Are the glasses just to make you look smarter?
My right eye is slightly higher in my head than the left eye. I'm kind of a spaz. But the glasses are absolutely real. The suits, however, are fictional.

Were you homecoming king at Brookline High?
If there was a homecoming, I was unaware of it, due to my heavy watching of Star Blazers.

Star Blazers?
Yes. You are unaware of the animated Japanese science-fiction serial that aired on Channel 25? I don't think many of the athletes at Brookline High did, either.

I was invited to leave the All Newton Music School, but I'm wondering why they allowed a resident of Brookline, like yourself, to study there.
I'm pretty sure they'll take anybody. My dear clarinet teacher, Paulette Bowes, is mentioned on my Wikipedia page, which is where I suspect you found this out. Repeat your name for me?

Jonathan Soroff.
Oh, you were legendary at that school. How unfortunate.

Dirtiest thing you ever did with your viola or clarinet?
Put them in a closet, hoping they would mate.

Do you have NPR on when you're having sex?
Let's just say that The Sound of Young America on WNYC is an aphrodisiac, and all right-thinking Americans can agree on that.

Are you alarmed that a lot of young people get their news from The Daily Show*?*
The Daily Show just takes actual fact and then lets it sit there in all of its absurd, horrible, awful glory, and thereby begets comedy. So I don't think your average college kids, in whatever they wear these days—straw boaters, fur coats, portable bombs—who enjoy The Daily Show are being misinformed. I think they're better served than even some of the networks that are wholly fake, like The Onion, or Fox.

That sort of answers my next question...
That's because I can smell around corners. I'm onto you. I'm a former magazine journalist myself. I know these tricks. You're not going to get me to say that I have a prehensile tail.

It says in your Wikipedia entry that you do.
I wish. I've given a lot of thought in my professional career as to which superpowers are the best superpowers. Flight or invisibility? Invisibility wins. But I'll tell you: The allure of having a monkey-like prehensile tail beats them both.

What would the tabloids say if they cared about you?
They'd have very little to say, except that I was dating Jesse James for 15 months.

So you're bringing sexy back?
That's what my tattoo says.

Would you ever kiss Justin Timberlake?
I would kiss Justin Long, my adorable comrade-in-arms for Mac. I don't think Justin Timberlake would allow me to be near him. I was staying at the Chateau Marmont and ran into him. I just sort of said, "Hey!" in a friendly way, and he recoiled in horror, like I was some weird stalker.

Pop-culture icon you'd most like to have molest you?
I'm sensing a lot of molestation questions here. What publication is this? The Vatican newspaper?

You've called Obama our nation's first nerd president. What about Chester A. Arthur?
What is the evidence of his nerd-dom?

The insistence upon using his middle initial.
No. That was all perfectly normal for the time. You know, Chester A. Arthur could've beaten us both up.

Did you sell your soul to Apple?
I will say this to you from my iPhone: I have been an Apple user since 1984, except for one brief sojourn in the wilderness which we will not mention because it was simply silly experimentation in college. That was from my iPhone, by the way. Did you get that?

Three books you'd bring to a desert island?
The Areas of My Expertise by John Hodgman. More Information Than You Require by John Hodgman. Don't Point That Thing at Me by Kyril Bonfiglioli.

Is there a book you could never get through?
As I grow older, I grow stupider and less patient, and as I grow more attuned to my mortality, I'm less likely to give a book a fair shake.

Battlestar Galactica—best show ever?
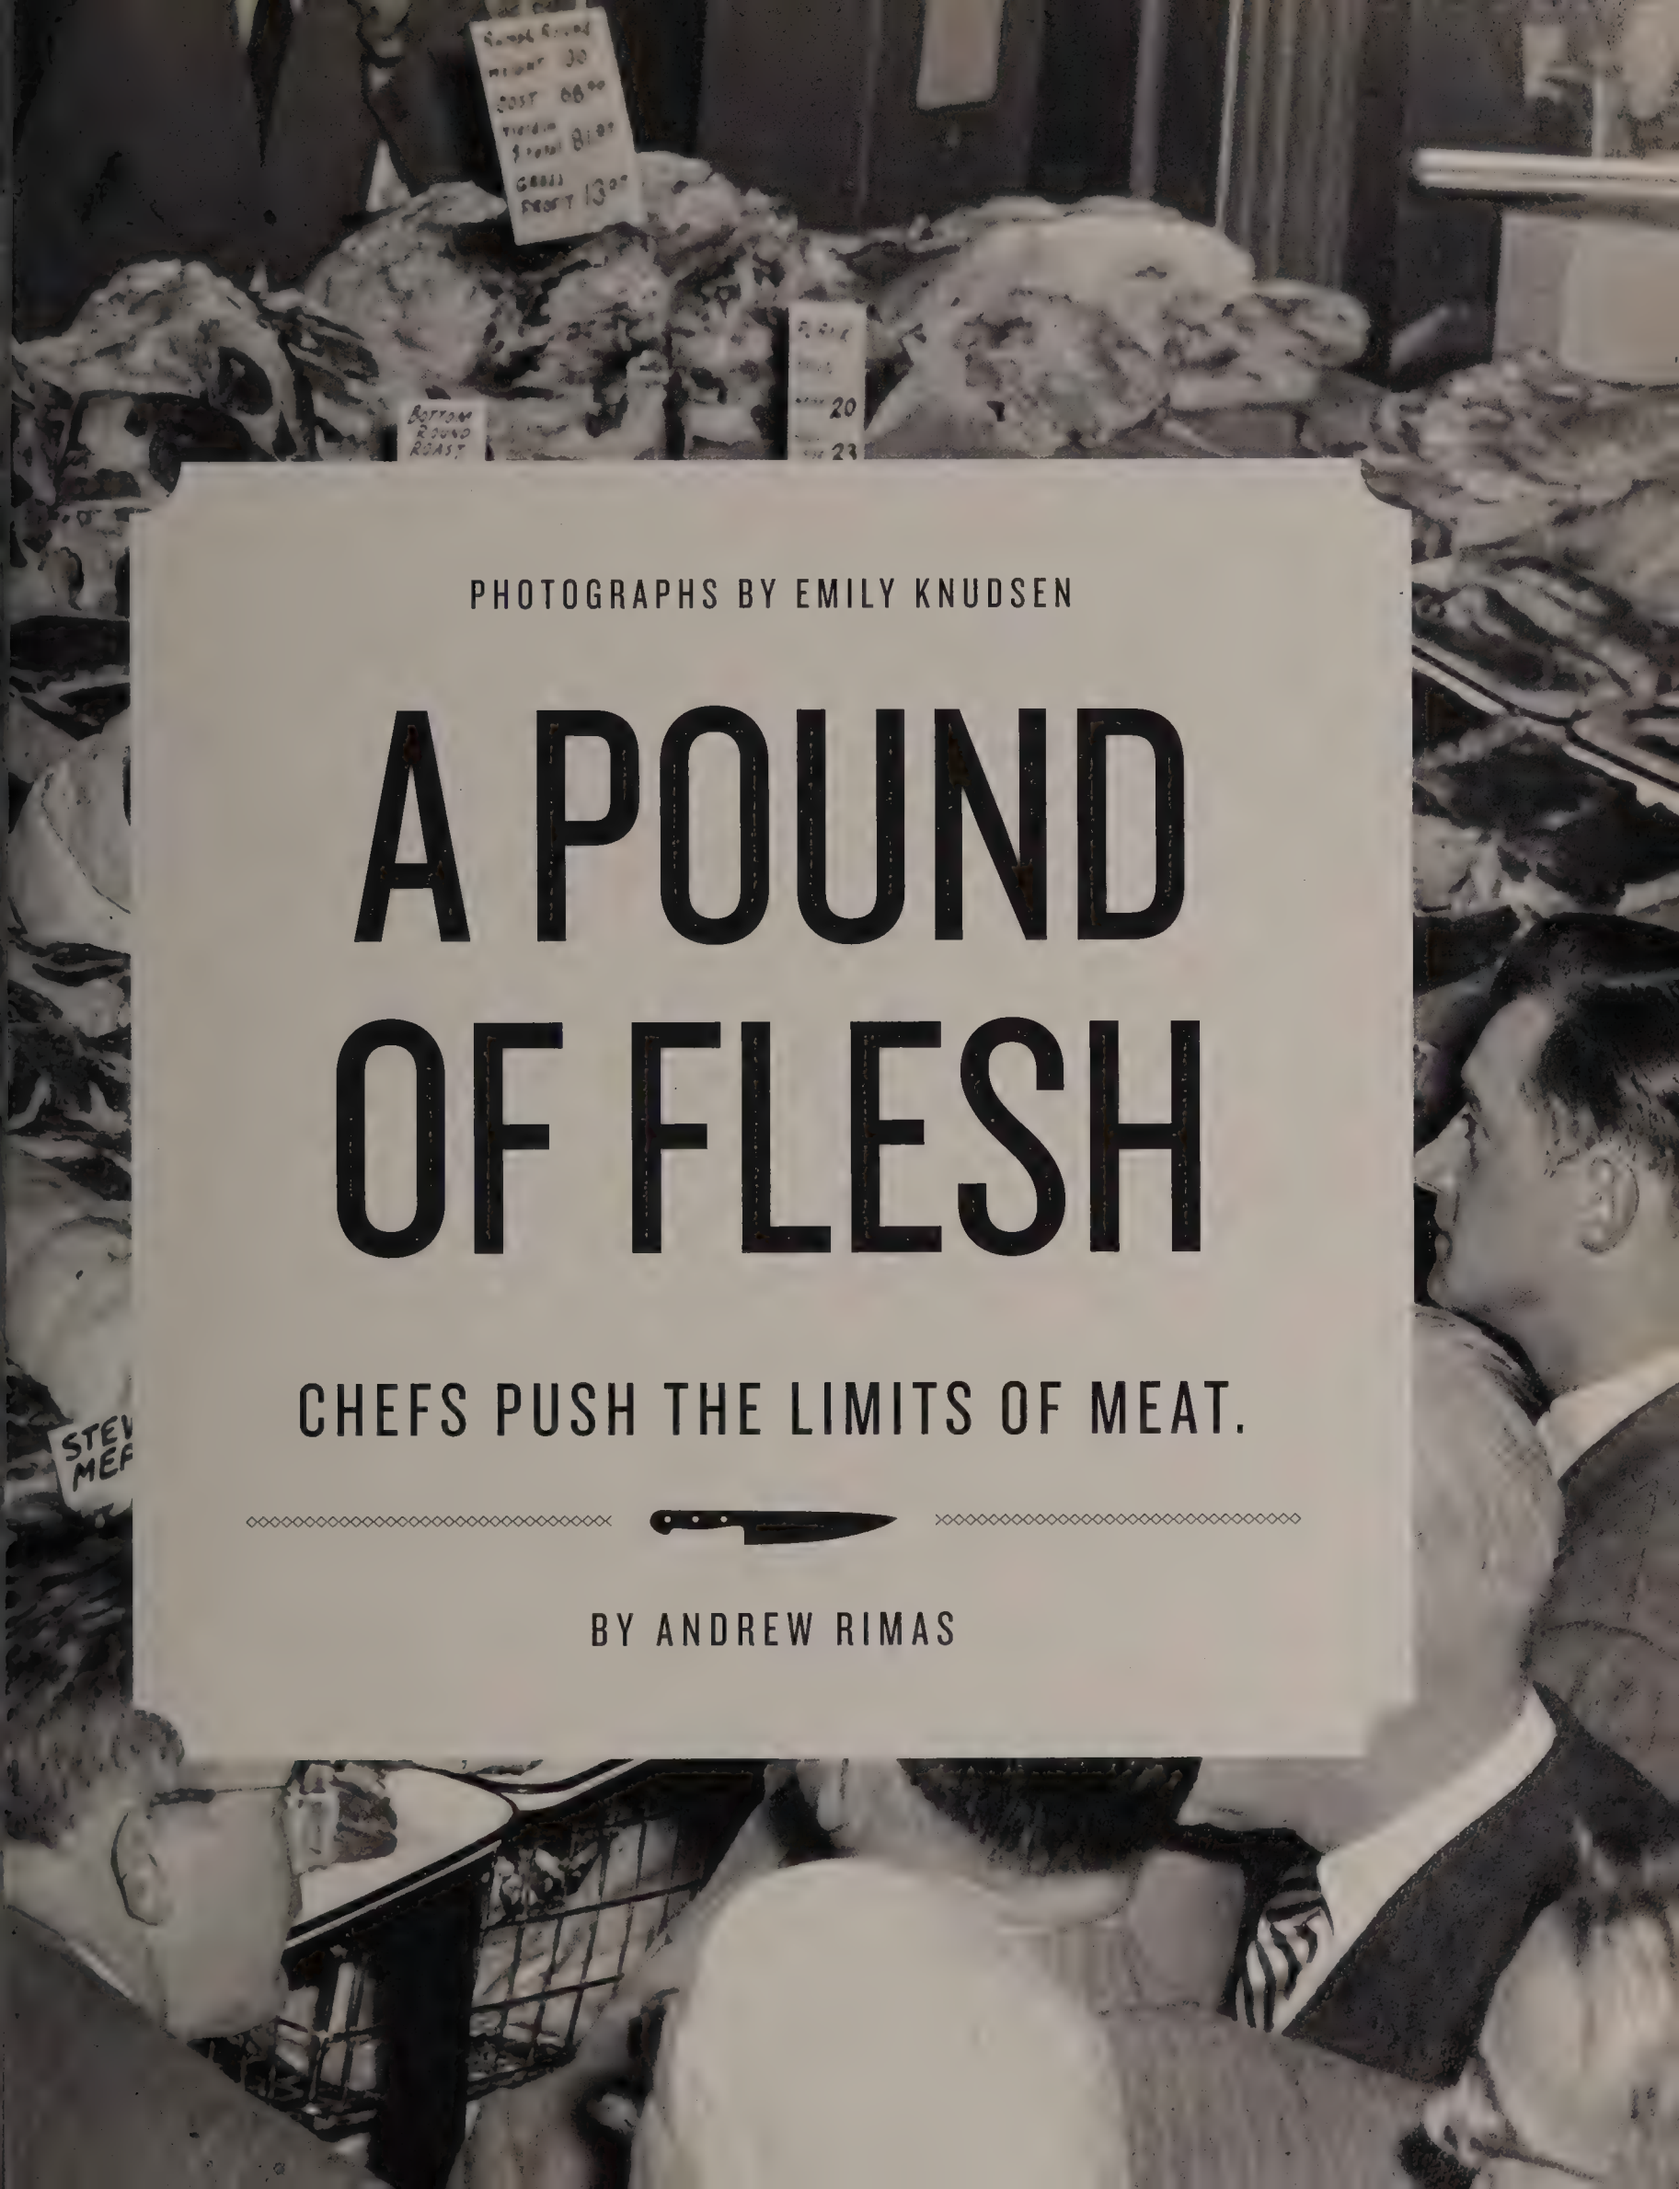
Sure. Superlatives of that kind are so ridiculous as to be meaningless, but I love that show so much that I will say yes.



Animal you most resemble?
A Hodgman bird. It's a large, flightless, somewhat overweight bird of the Northeast.

Favorite fun fact about Massachusetts?
I find it amusing that they destroyed towns to build the Quabbin Reservoir.

Fill in this blank: Nerds do it _____.
Nerds do it blankly.

Last question: Do you prefer nerd or geek?
I use them interchangeably, which makes me something of an apostate to both. To which I say, "Shut up, nerds!" ×××

A POUND OF FLESH

CHEFS PUSH THE LIMITS OF MEAT.

BY ANDREW RIMAS

FINE DINING OFTEN BEGINS WITH A PIG, A GUN AND A BUCKET. ON AN OILY, GRAY MORNING IN FEBRUARY, THE STAFF AT THE BUTCHER SHOP RESTAURANT ON TREMONT STREET IS WAITING FOR THE OUTCOME OF SUCH A BARNYARD EQUATION, TO BE DELIVERED ALONG WITH THE WEEKEND'S CRATES OF CHICKENS.

But the pig is late (no pun intended). A Nor'easter knocked out the power at the slaughterhouse, and the animal won a five-hour reprieve.

Chef Robert Grant takes the news coolly and sets to whacking apart 30 pounds of lamb shoulders for ragout. In accordance with its name, the Butcher Shop sells dismembered livestock—both on the plate and in the shopping bag—most of which pass under Grant's knife. This morning's subjects are big, bony pieces of coral meat, webbed with membrane. The only delicacy they require is plucking the prescapular lymph nodes from their little nests of fat, but otherwise Grant cuts loose and furious.

"I was the only 16-year-old in Colorado who knew what a hanger steak was," he says. It's probably true. He's a serious, young chef with a veterinarian's mind for anatomy; he knows a lot about the rosé veal movement, and he's steady with a bandsaw. Like a sculptor, Grant can look at an untrimmed stretch of tenderloin and see the jeweled steaks trapped under a mask of fat and outer muscle.

At three o'clock, the pig steps through the front door. Long and baby-skinned, it's hoisted in a fireman's lift by its driver, who looks embarrassed to be wearing 80 pounds of raw meat to a four-star enoteca. All the overripe lunchtime drinkers stiffen at their barstools, frowning at the matte blue eyes under the plastic sheet. It looks like the world's evilest burrito. But by the time Grant unspools the carcass from its shroud, his boldest customers are hovering by the butcher block, hands poised guardedly above the rims of their sauvignon blancs.

"It's important to come up with a game plan," says Grant. "What stays on. What comes off." He snips away the pig's tongue, then its ears. "You have to have the end result in mind."

Today, the goal is porchetta, a Gordian knot of deboned loins and other saddle meats rolled with herbs and pistachios, then brined in sugar and aromatics for 10 hours before being poached in a giant steam kettle. Grant eases his knife into the pig's shoulders, working the blade toward the base of the skull.

"We want access to the Atlas bone," he says. "The last vertebrae before the head…"

There's a sound of tearing cartilage, then a wet snap, and the skull comes free of its anchors.

"We're gonna make head cheese," he calls to Johnny Burke, chef de partie, before setting the gory object down.

"Awesome!"

THERE WAS A TIME, not long ago but as distant as when BlackBerries still seemed exciting, that pork bellies had no place at a polite dinner table. The liminal parts of animals—the skins and drippings and viscera—were once considered as palatable as asphalt. That was before today's flowering of charcuterie. "Nose-to-tail eating" is now a motto in restaurants famed as much for their house-made rillettes as for their hanger steaks and dayboat scallops—places like Craigie on Main, Coppa and 51 Lincoln.

"A lot of us are focusing on building dishes from the whole animal," says 51 Lincoln's chef/owner Jeff Fournier. "Today, I have braised ducks' legs. We'll do a confit and use the breasts in a separate dish."

It's a holistic view of a carcass with a dose of hunters' sentiment, of the belief held by shamans and Na'vi that it's OK to kill in the name of the daily pecial so long as you thank the orpse and clean your plate. Waste ot a gizzard, goes the logic, and a hicken's death has cosmic meaning. But much of the appeal boils own to the bubbling glee with which Fournier says, "We made a uck liverwurst today. It's really, eally good."

Pig cultists like Fournier are artisans of traditional cooking, of ld French recipes written by old renchmen who believed that the roper home for a young mammal vas at 375 degrees for 20 minutes er pound. "There are two schools f thought [in fine dining]," says ournier. "The modern, molecular astronomy, and the old-school eritage. I go more for the old ways." Which means he sometimes braises n entire goat.

"I don't like wasting food," says amie Bissonnette of Coppa and oro. "You get a whole pig in, you otta use everything." Bissonnette redits Lydia Shire with popularzing nose-to-tail eating in the 80s, but he discovered his own ove of tripe when he was living n France. "All chefs get drawn to nteresting ethnic cuisines," he says. "And all these cuisines do omething with offal."

To really squeeze every bite from an animal, you can't just bake its nnards in tomato sauce. That's why you can hardly throw a stone in the South End without hitting a housemade charcuterie plate. Fatback is no longer unloved.

"Some of these techniques are a thousand years old," Fournier says. Despite, or perhaps because of, the antiquity of the process, sausagemaking in restaurant kitchens isn't always smiled upon by the FDA, and some chefs are forced to play hide the salumi.

"It depends what kinds of sausages you're talking about," says Bissonnette. "But the state of Massachusetts has been cracking down." Most restaurants aren't permitted to fiddle with nitrates, let alone raw delicacies like sopressata or prosciutto. Perhaps it's the crux of uncooked meat, room temperatures and microbiology that annoys the inspectors. "It's a shame," Fournier says. "It's a cool way of treating those products. It feels like a lost art."

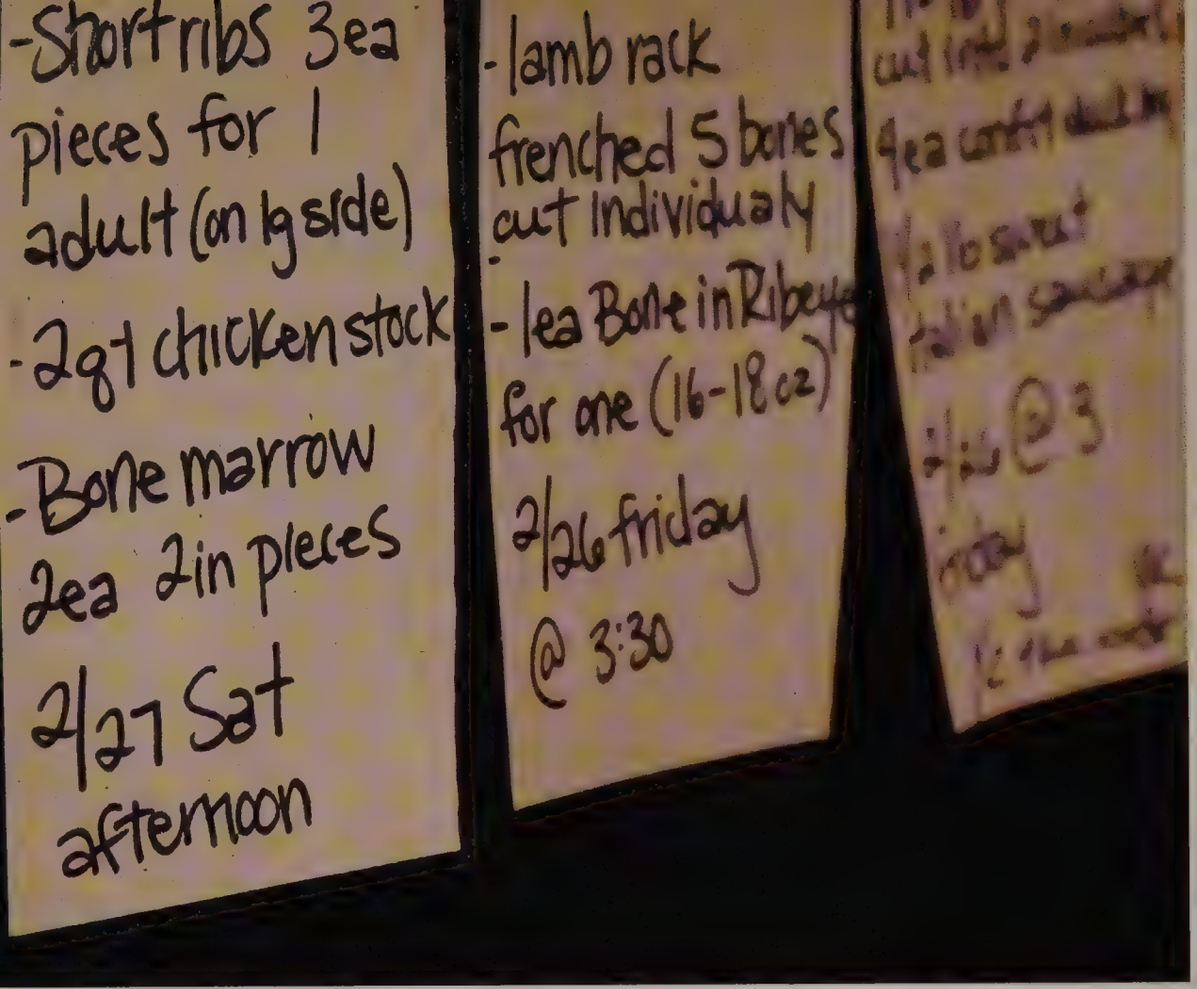
That's a large part of the appeal. We live in the age of the gastronerd. Food—not just eating it, but opining about it—is America's favorite hobby. Culinary programs fatten the cable lineup, Cook's Illustrated subscriptions keep snowballing, and everybody's got an answer for that dinner party chestnut: What's the strangest thing you ever ate? Twenty years ago, the response was probably sushi. Today, an experienced public is more likely to say veal-brain piperade.

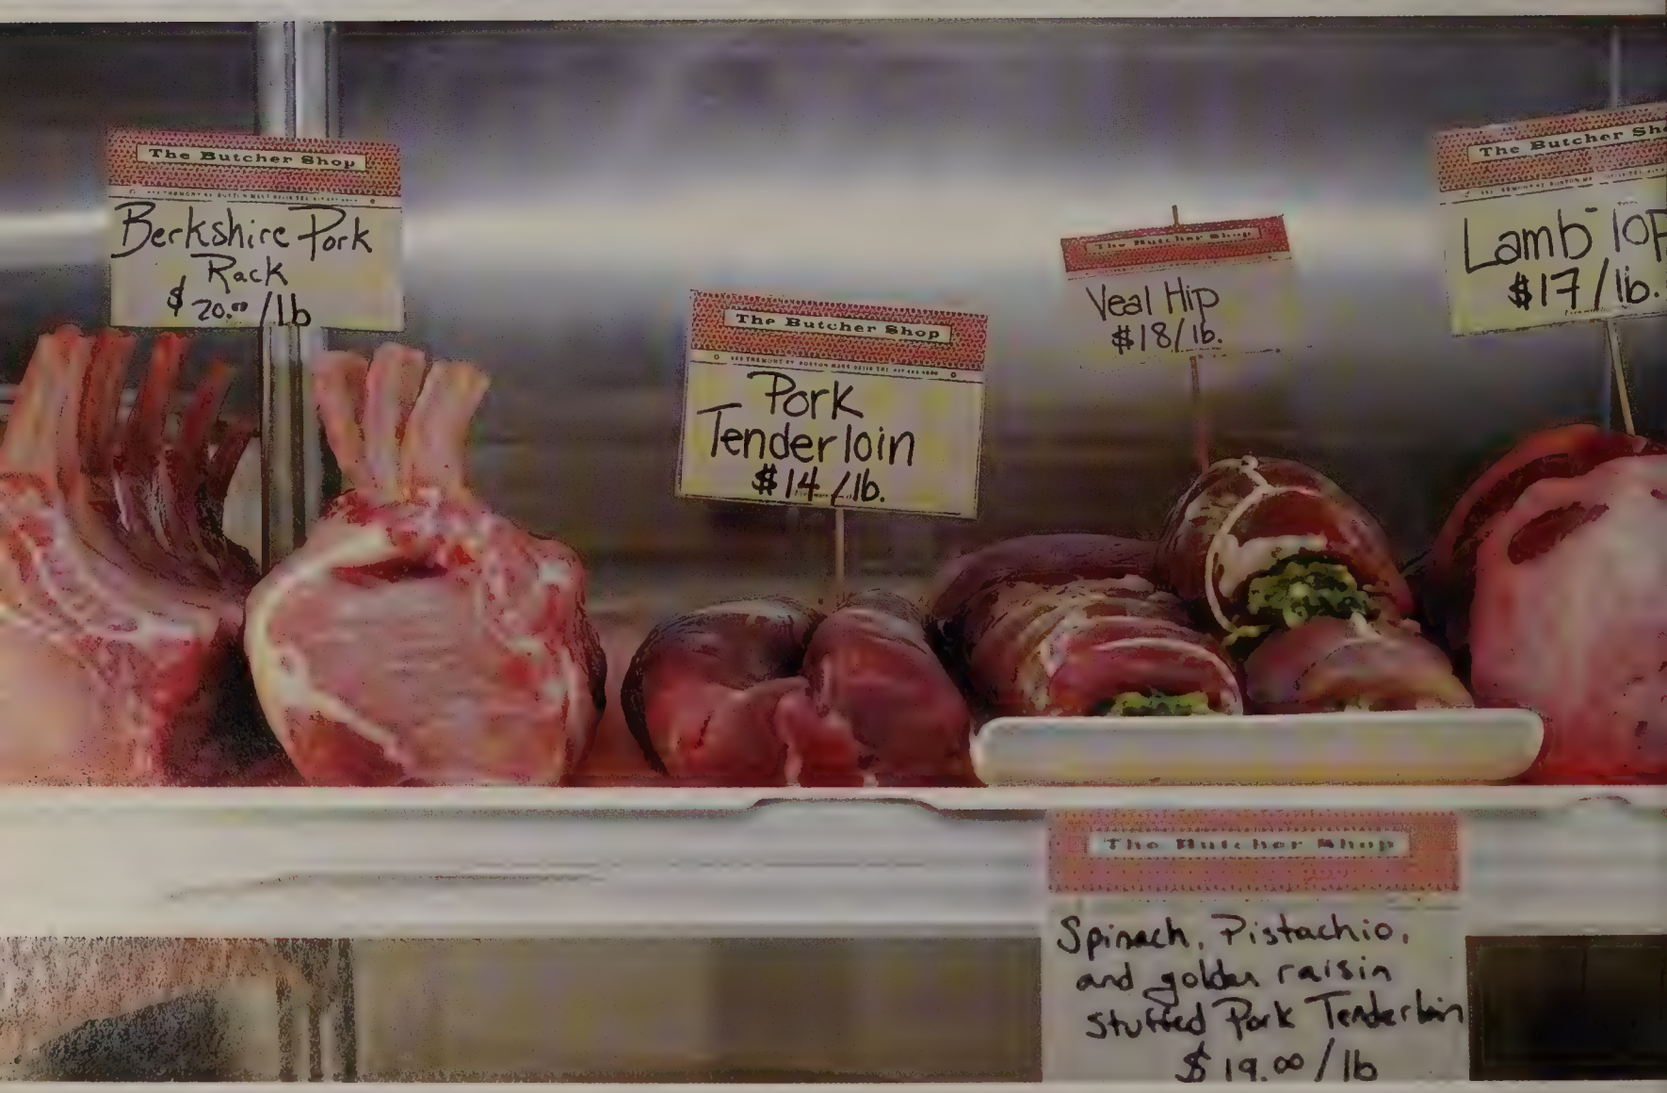
YOU CAN HARDLY THROW A STONE IN THE SOUTH END WITHOUT HITTING A CHARCUTERIE PLATE.

BISSONNETTE, Fournier and their carnivorous brothers are very much a sausage party. To wit: Of the five local chefs invited to cook whole pigs at the Cochon 555 competition this year, all were male, and a majority had either facial hair or visible tattoos. For whatever cultural reasons—Paleolithic gender roles, insouciance in the face of cholesterol, biceps—most butchers are men, just like most pastry chefs are women. Men like meat. They like to chop it, grind it, hang it on basement hooks until it develops a crust of mold and a woodsy aroma. And they like to eat it. Just walk into your nearest endoscopy clinic and count the heavy-set gents looking nervously at their watches.



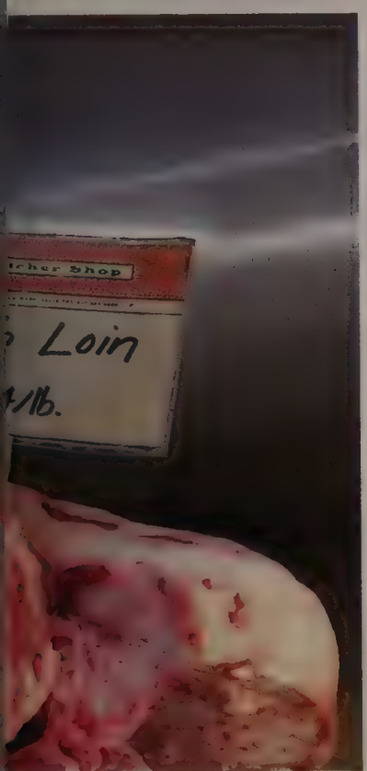
Barbara Lynch, however, is not a man. As the owner of the Butcher Shop, she's the moving spirit behind her restaurant's new meat CSA, a community-supported agriculture program in which people buy a share of a veal calf, or a flock of lambs, or a pig like the one Grant is breaking down today. "In most CSAs, you get cuts you don't use," he says. "We're applying a full-service butcher aspect to it." As well as guaranteeing premium, humanely-raised meat to his subscribers, Grant churns the animals into terrines, cooked hams and rack chops. Shares aren't cheap at about $195, but they sell out fast.

The Butcher Shop's CSA, unsurprisingly, caters to people who can afford to eat at the Butcher Shop—the sort of people who order pheasant en croute. In this economy, most of us have to make do with McNuggets. But meat consumption as a whole has never been higher, at 226.3 pounds per capita annually.



"People are going out to eat less, but they're looking for a quality product," says Jason Parent, cofounder and president of the Meat House, a national chain of high-end butcher shops that's expanding into Arlington this month. His stores are seeing an uptick in sales, despite the death spasms in the economy. Savenor's Market—which to Boston foodies is the Church of the Holy Sepulchre, the Temple Mount and the Kaaba rolled up in an inviting storefront—is doing a brisk business in grass-fed rib eyes at $21 per pound.

"This is grass-fed beef that you would swear could be graded prime," says owner Ron Savenor, one of Barbara Lynch's main suppliers. "I can't get mass quantities of it, but I tell [the producer, U.S. Wellness Meats,] that anything marbled to the standard I want, there's a guaranteed sale."



Savenor saunters down the refrigerated aisle of his Beacon Hill store, admiring his own wares. "Look at that marbling!" he says, picking up a packet of antibiotic-free, heritage-breed pork chops. "Cook that up medium-rare, and you'll be in heaven!" (Disclosure: I did. I was.) An elite butcher shop like Savenor's views the food pyramid from its zenith—tenderloin is the top seller. But even at the upscale Meat

House, cofounder and CEO Justin Rosberg observes a slightly different trend. "We've seen some customers trade down. They eat sirloin strip instead of tenderloin, or steak tips instead of strip, or hamburger instead of steak tips." During the dark summer of 2009, for instance, Rosberg noted a surge in chickens. "Probably 60–70 percent of overall purchases was white meat," he says. "It's a more economical price per pound. With gas prices going up and homes collapsing, we grabbed our wallets and hung on for dear life."

So while chefs plumb the deepest recesses of the pig, the public still largely eats chicken breasts. Sweetbreads, terrines, tails and trotters have yet to penetrate the American menu. "Those are less than one percent of purchases," says Rosberg. Pork in general is still widely viewed as dubious; unlike beef and chicken, only one in 10 Americans eats pork three or more times per week.

TERRINES, TAILS AND TROTTERS HAVE YET TO PENETRATE THE AMERICAN MENU.

THERE'S A SANGUINE ADAGE: Don't eat anything you wouldn't kill yourself. In the more fashionable culinary classrooms, students now decapitate chickens as a lesson that meat doesn't arrive bagged and bloodless, in clean, deconstructed segments. It requires a death.

Were I a farm animal—and some people with whom I've dined think it a strong likelihood—I'd hate to die for the sake of a complex sausage. So goes the most common argument for vegetarianism. Nowadays, environmental ethics drive people to the bean can, too, but the first inkling most people experience of quitting meat is when they empathize with a Sunday roast. Then they take a sniff of griddled bacon and put aside uncomfortable thoughts. By next year, American meat consumption is expected to grow to 230.4 pounds per capita.

"I go with what Julia Child said to me," Savenor advises. "Everything in moderation. Including moderation."

At the Butcher Shop, the pig's gawping, earless head wears a perfect bullet hole, like a Hindu bindi. It's the only part of the animal that won't melt into abstraction as Grant breaks down the carcass. A pig's face, until it's peeled and boiled, is stubbornly piggish.

"A lot of this is done by hand," says Grant. He pulls the back legs, the hams, off his pig and places them neatly aside. "The muscles of an animal tell you how they want to come apart." Then he strips the meat from the saddle like he's uprooting an old carpet.

An elderly man in a Burberry raincoat stops by the display case to study the chops. He's in the minority, since most people who buy meat are women. "The last survey we did, 65–70 percent of our shoppers were female," says Rosberg. "It's moms who make the decision at the store level." According to a 2008 report from Meat & Deli Retailer, mothers control 80 percent of a family's purchases. And, unlike snout-to-tail chefs, most of them have no ambitions for duck-liver mousse or guanciale with a generous slice of lardo. They're interested in health and the environment, so the words "local" and "organic" remain loaded with commercial meaning.

"The real trend is that people want to know where it comes from," says Savenor. "They want local. And there's the interest in grass-fed beef."

Parent disagrees, citing, again, the corrosive economy. "Once you add the difference in cost per pound, we've seen that people are buying away from organic." Boneless, skinless chicken breasts—especially if they've been premarinated in lemon-pepper sauce—still lord over the nation's dinner plates.

IN THE BUTCHER SHOP'S basement kitchen, Grant leaves me in the company of a charcuterie plate while he and Burke plot the evening's menu.

"I got four rib eyes, maybe some culotte. Everybody was ordering culotte last night."

"So we'll do skirt, tenderloin, porterhouse."

"Right on!"

Like red wine or dark chocolate, the fois-gras terrine is a primary color on the palate, a broad stroke of minerals and butter. The mortadella is creamy and the capicola a sweet nip of distilled pork. But the duck-liver mousse tastes a little salty.

In James Joyce's Ulysses, the first thing we learn about Leopold Bloom is that he "ate with relish the inner organs of beasts and fowls. He liked thick giblet soup, nutty gizzards, a stuffed roast heart, liverslices fried with crustcrumbs, fried hencods' roes. Most of all he liked grilled mutton kidneys which gave to his palate a fine tang of faintly scented urine." The demihero of Modernist literature—the everyman—is a nose-to-tail aficionado. By today's terms, he'd be a committed food snob.

I eat meat because, until the environment or intestinal health say otherwise, I can. And I eat grilled kidneys, not because I'm an everyman, but because I've been educated to "relish the inner organs of beasts" in good restaurants. Not everyone's so lucky.

Deep in their Viking kitchens, the chefs of the pig cult plot the latest expression in sweetbreads on crostini. Outside, their followers brush the evening's crumbs from their lapels and wait, fingers drumming, for the bill. Fashion, even in food, dances merrily alongside common reality. But not with it. ✖✖✖

Is barefoot the way to go?

Run Free

WHEN IT COMES TO EXERCISE, YOU have to mix it up. If you do the same thing repeatedly, your body adjusts, and you no longer accrue the same benefits. By varying your workout, you shock your system into adapting, hopefully staving off the inevitable plateau. You also keep yourself interested, which is important when there's an alluring couch and PS3 sitting at home.

Running, to my mind, is the most boring form of exercise. All you serotonin fiends doing the Boston Marathon on April 19 are patently deranged, and you'll never convince me otherwise. Admittedly, I jog at least three times a week, but only so I can drink beer and eat cheeseburgers without ending up on a TLC show called I Have to Get Weighed at Truck Stops.

My problem with running is the repetition. If you're lifting weights, you can spend two weeks at the gym and never repeat the same exercise. With jogging, you can change your route and vary

Toeing the Line RUNNING LEGEND AND 2009 Boston Marathon third-place finisher Ryan Hall joins Ezra on the Comm. Ave. Mall as our writer tests a pair of minimalist shoes. Hall's advice on going sole-less: "You don't want to overdo it."

The sole's so thin I can feel each pebble on the pavement. This doesn't hurt, but it's an odd sensation for someone used to sneakers.

your speed, but at the end of the day, you're putting one foot in front of the other, over and over and over again. Running is running, right?

Not necessarily. There's a growing subset of runners embracing a change in the fundamental mechanics of the sport. The basic idea is that human beings were running for thousands of years before the invention of Nike Air, so why not revisit the pre-sneaker age and go barefoot?

This crowd's major beef with modern running shoes is that they encourage an unnatural stride. When wearing them, you land on your heel and roll your foot forward to propel your stride. The thick cushioning of the heel enables these mechanics, but barefooters argue that's not the way the human body was built to run.

Think about sprinters, with their lightweight, unpadded cleats. They run on the balls of their feet in quick, efficient strides, just like early man scampered from the mastodon. It's like jogging barefoot on the beach. You don't just pound along on your heels—you strike the ground closer to your toes, with the muscles of your feet and lower legs flexing to absorb the impact. If you're not used to it (and few of us are), running barefoot is incredibly tiring. Instead of the shoe soaking up the jolt of each stride, muscles that aren't taxed in sneakers are put to work. And isn't a bit of muscle exertion the reason you're running in the first place?

So that's the barefoot theory: Your body has evolved to move this way, therefore you might be less likely to suffer the injuries that plague regular runners. My brother-in-law is an orthopedic surgeon, and he has a dim view of the sport, on account of the constant running-related injuries he treats. The pounding takes its toll over the years.

Of course, barefoot running has its own challenges. You need to get into it slowly, allowing your muscles to adapt, or you'll risk injury. Your feet need time to toughen up and form the pads that'll resist the insults of a public street. And of course, winter is a problem. But if you're looking to give the barefoot movement a try, there's footwear available for varying degrees of commitment.

TESTING MY OWN barefoot fortitude, I go to the Comm. Ave. Mall to try three minimalist options: the super-lightweight Nike Free 5.0 V4, the condom-for-your-foot Vibram FiveFingers KSO and that ultimate back-to-basics sneaker, my own bare feet. To make things a little more interesting, 2009 Boston Marathon third-place finisher Ryan Hall will weigh in on whether feet are the future of running. Hall's in town doing some recon on Heartbreak Hill.

I try the Nike Free first. It's a cold day in Boston, and the Free most resembles my trusty Nike Air Max Turbulence. Most important, I get to keep my socks on—for now. Nike bills the Free 5.0 as the running shoe for people who'd rather be barefoot, and indeed, there's not much to it. The Free feels like a slipper with laces, super-lightweight and with a really flexible sole that lets your feet sense the contours, if not the texture, of the ground.

Moreover, the Free encourages a natural, barefoot gait. There's not much shock absorption in the heels, so if you try to bounce along on them, you'll get sore mighty quick. While the Free looks similar to a traditional running shoe, I make it perhaps a half-mile before realizing I can't sustain the barefoot stride. The muscles in my lower legs start to complain, so I walk the rest.

The Free's flimsy upper and thin sole make it a great shoe to throw in your carry-on for workouts on the road, but I wouldn't plan on wearing it on long runs unless you're accustomed to the barefoot mechanics. It's fine for hitting the elliptical in the hotel gym, however. And it's supremely comfortable for kicking around in. This would be a good shoe to buy if you're tentatively giving the barefoot thing a try, because if things don't work out, you've still got a useable set of sneaks.

Nike Free 5.0 V4

Pros

- Easy to pack for travel workouts
- Feels like wearing slippers
- Conventional looks

Cons

- Channels in the sole snag floor-scratching pebbles
- Forces you to run on the balls of your feet, whether you want to or not
- Offset laces come untied too easily

Vibram FiveFingers KSO

Pros

- The barefoot experience, without the lacerations
- Tight fit means your feet don't slide around in the shoe when running downhill
- Serves double duty as a beach or boating shoe

Cons

- No thermal protection
- Makes Crocs look like Tod's loafers
- Keeps you running on your forefoot, for better or worse

Next, I shed my socks and cram my feet into a pair of Vibram FiveFingers. The Vibram has individual spots for each of your toes, so it takes some time to get my freezing piggies in the proper positions. But once it's on, the Vibram fits like a glove for your foot. In fact, you need to measure your foot to order the right set of FiveFingers, because traditional shoe sizes are too imprecise. The recommended way to do this is to stand against a wall and trace your foot on a sheet of paper to find the length from your heel to your longest toe. Except that didn't really work for me, because my Frankenstein feet ran over the edge of an 8-by-11 sheet of paper. So I just guessed.

Every time I glance down at the Vibram, I'm startled. It looks like I stepped in toxic sludge, and my feet mutated into synthetic green flippers. I'm told you get used to them, eventually.

While the Vibram has a rubber sole, it's so thin I can feel each pebble on the pavement. On the frozen ground, my feet weather the lumps and imperfections of the surface. This doesn't hurt, but it's an odd sensation for someone used to running in traditional sneakers. In terms of mechanics, the Vibram seems about as close as you can get to pure barefoot running—the Free will tolerate the occasional heel strike, but the Vibram really forces you to bounce along on the balls of your feet. Which is, I suppose, the idea. I wear out even quicker in the Vibram than I do in the Free, but by ramping up slowly, it could be a viable distance option.

Finally, it's time to ditch the shoes altogether and go au naturel. First impression: It's cold in Boston with no shoes on. Second, it seems that the invention of running shoes is at least partly a response to another man-made creation: pavement. Running barefoot on pavement doesn't feel like it's excellent for the ol' musculoskeletal system, regardless of which part of your foot strikes the ground first. However, going off-pavement has its own hazards. I can honestly say that I never realized how much dog crap is on the Comm. Ave. Mall until I tried running around sans sneakers. I can't go more than a couple steps at a time without juking to avoid a dog log, which means instead stepping on a sharp stick, a tree root, or some other hazard. Regardless of the mechanical pros and cons of pure barefoot running, the practical implications of going barefoot in the city gross me out.

Just as I'm gratefully pulling my socks back on, Hall shows up. The country's best marathoner seems bemused by my experiment. "I've run barefoot on the beach before, but the whole thing is that you don't want to overdo it," he says. "It can be a good thing to work into your routine, but I know people who've gotten into barefoot running and tried to do too much too soon, and then end up getting injured." I ask Hall if he'd ever consider ditching the shoes completely and pitting thousands of years of human biomechanical evolution against the past four decades or so of sneaker technology.

"When someone wins the Boston Marathon with no shoes on," he says, "then I'll go barefoot." ✖✖✖

The practical implications of going barefoot in the city gross me out.

Feet

Pros

- As natural as it gets
- The price is right
- Maximum feedback

Cons

- Broken glass
- Snow
- Dog doo

I like to shop on Topman.com, but all the small sizes sell out first!

My favorite designers are Tom Ford, Marc Jacobs, Rag & Bone, Elizabeth and James. And I'm absolutely obsessed with Oumlil, a Moroccan designer who custom-designs formal wear for a younger crowd.

These pants are from Zara. I go there for more formal professional-wear because it's reasonably priced and good quality.

I never wear sneakers... not a fan.

I'm not a shoe whore. I get a pair or two that will last me until they fall apart.

Gender Roles

Leading Ladies Following on the high heels of Dustin Hoffman, Robin Williams and Tyler Perry, actors from the Charlestown Working Theater aim to thrill with frills. In their comedy Act a Lady, the men of a small Prohibition-era town put on a play—and a lacy gown or two. Gender lines are crossed and surprises ensue as the farce plunges them deeper into their wild and feminine sides. See the fashion show through May 1. Erin Wiegert

Ajami ★★ ½ One of this year's Oscar nominees for best foreign language film, this collaboration between Palestinian Scandar Copti and Israeli Yaron Shani is a nerve-jangling crime drama chronicling the ways sectarian strife creeps into everything, including the underworld. As a collection of crossed wires and doomed good intentions set in the Tel Aviv suburb of Yaffa, the movie makes it clear that surviving in this neighborhood is hard enough without also having to take part in a Holy War. Ajami is broken into six overlapping chapters, each following a different protagonist on a slightly skewed timeline. But the more that's revealed, the more Copti and Shani's puzzle starts to seem gimmicky and cheap. There's a vivid sense of place, and it's impossible not to feel for these young characters, but a more straightforward telling may have granted Ajami the noble inevitability of tragedy. As is, it's merely clever. (At West Newton.)

Alice In Wonderland ★ ½ It's hard to remember now, but there was a time when Tim Burton was an original, exciting filmmaker and not just a brand name. These days, you know his formula. Burton takes an existing property and gussies it up with kooky production design and overindulgent performances from his wife, Helena Bonham Carter, and his other wife, Johnny Depp. The extravagant failure of Alice in Wonderland feels like nothing more than a once-great director beating his head against the brick wall of an artistic dead end. Not an adaptation of Lewis Carroll's book but a sequel, Linda Woolverton's screenplay finds a 19-year-old Alice returning to a Wonderland she barely recalls visiting. If this sounds familiar, that's because Steven Spielberg used the same faulty scenario for his awful Peter Pan flick, Hook. This bizarre rip-off of one of history's biggest bombs is a joyless, empty film. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Avatar ★ ½ Twelve years and some $400 million later, James Cameron's latest opus lands with a thud. Sure, you can admire the 3-D presentation, performance-capture technique and computer animation. (If you're not already impressed enough, characters keep elbowing you in the ribs, a reminder that you're watching something amazing.) This is groundbreaking, next-level technology, and I was bored out of my damn mind. Looking like a tacky airbrush painting, Avatar is CGI eye candy by way of prog-rock album covers with an absence of characterization and an abundance of corny dialogue. Unabashedly ripping off Terrence Malick's The New World, Kevin Costner's Dances With Wolves and his own Aliens, Cameron sends Sam Worthington's crippled space marine to a distant planet to reenact a banal white-guy-saves-the-natives fantasy. It feels recycled, rehashed and more like an F/X demo reel than an actual movie. (At New England Aquarium and in the suburbs.)

The Bounty Hunter ★ Do you think Jennifer Aniston and Gerard Butler even bother to watch their films? What is it with these two? If I see either one on a movie poster, I know I'm in for a night of crap. In this desultory, abysmally directed action-comedy, Butler stars as a drunken skiptracer charged with dragging his embittered ex-wife (Aniston) to jail. She's a tough-talking reporter (sure, she is) investigating a suicide that may have been a murder. Think they'll uncover the truth? Wonder if they'll get back together? Boasting production values unfit for late-night cable flicks, the movie looks washed-out and cheap. Butler is loutish and unappealing, while Aniston remains improbably tanned and glammed. N effort whatsoever was expended in the maki of this movie. (At Boston Common, Fenway a in the suburbs.)

Crazy Heart ★★ ½ In his best performance since The Big Lebowski, Jeff Bridges stars as a washed-up, alcoholic country singer touring lousy Southwestern dive bars. Scott Cooper's debut feature initially boasts a grungy authenticity, but just when you think Crazy Heart is its way to being The Wrestler of country musi a banal redemption formula kicks in and send the whole film reeling off into inspirational-T movie land. The too-young Maggie Gyllenhaa proves an improbable love interest for Bridge seedy troubadour, and (an excellent) Colin Farrell drops by as a former protégé who mak success look far too easy. The grim, admirable desolation of the film's early passages is quic abandoned for garden-variety uplift and clich rehab scenes. The late-game addition of Robe

EPIC FAIL

Can Sam Worthington go away now, please?

Clash of the Titans ★½
Starring Sam Worthington, Liam Neeson, Ralph Fiennes, Jason Flemyng, Gemma Arterton and Alexa Davalos. Screenplay by Travis Beacham, Phil Hay and Matt Manfredi. Directed by Louis Leterrier.

THE MOVIE LANDSCAPE IS awash in a dispiriting deluge of remakes. These days it seems like a project only gets greenlighted by a studio if there's an identifiable title or existing property. Brand names are more important than stories. Hence, major summer action pictures based on old Hasbro toys. Filmmakers just want to know that somebody, somewhere, might fondly remember what they're selling. Nostalgia is a decent hook.

The 1981 Clash of the Titans, directed by Desmond Davis with visu effects by Ray Harryhausen, was nobody's idea of art. At best you co call it a fine cheese.

Caught awkwardly between the sword-and-sandal epics of Old Hollywood and post–Star Wars blockbuster filmmaking, it's a stunted, strange movie. An overqualified cast of master thespians hammed it up as Greek gods while Harry Hamlin coasted through the movie on his five o'clock shadow, slaying Medusa, bringing down the Kraken, and introducing kids to classical mythology and a line of action figures. (My cousin Melissa was so frightened by my toy Kraken, we had to hide it in the closet every time she came to visit.)

It's a silly film, but it had a peculiar personality. Harryhausen's lovingly handcrafted stop-motion effects felt borrowed from an earlier era, and indeed the F/X pioneer retired shortly thereafter. There was no longer a place in big-budget movies for whimsical affectations like his robot owl.

That goofy owl makes a brief appearance in Louis Leterrier's Clash, only to be mocked and tossed aside by the swaggering heroes. The new Clash of the Titans is all business. Devoid of comic relief, this turgid slog stays loyal to the original picture's story but saps it of any innovation or cleverness, indulging in a weightless, computer-generated blur.

Sam Worthington is cast as the demigod Perseus, the illegitimate son of Zeus, who takes on the heavens in a holy war. Worthington, who starred in Terminator: Salvation and Avatar, seems to have arrived uninvited onto movie screens, and for some reason he's now constantly cast as the lead in big-budget pictures. His agent deserves a giant bonus as the actor brings nothing to his roles, gruffly barking his lines in rote, muscular anonymity. I've seen all of Worthington's pictures, yet I doubt I could pick him out of a lineup. That's a problem.

Clash of the Titans couldn't possibly be more by-the-numbers.

Liam Neeson chews the scenery as Zeus, stuck under a ridiculous beard and a blinding suit of armor. (Like the recent Legion, Clash of the Titans figures that heaven can be best represented not by building a creative set, but by shining bright lights directly into the lens.) He decides that the meek humans don't worship him enough and thus deserve a plague of monsters. He unleashes scorpion creatures and eventually the overhyped Kraken, a sea-creature intended to wipe out the city of Argos and put the fear of Zeus back into the mortals.

Zeus gets a lot of bad advice from his brother Hades, played quite badly by Ralph Fiennes. The last time these two acting titans faced off, it was in Steven Spielberg's Schindler's List. It's hard to take their low-rent follow-up seriously. Fiennes has already maxed out his ability for supernatural villainy as Voldemort in the Harry Potter pictures, so, as Hades, all he can do is perform his dialogue in a guttural whisper and make hilarious entrances on a cloud of smoke and poofy batwings.

Perseus faces some arbitrary tasks, whose rules are usually explained by other characters just seconds before the battle begins. Clash of the Titans moves along like a video game, with Worthington defeating one generic monster and then starting all over again in the next scene. Leterrier has become the new go-to hack for films short on inspiration. He was the one recruited to remake The Incredible Hulk a couple of years back, which sapped all the oddball poetry from Ang Lee's original misfire and delivered a bland, meat-and-potatoes action movie.

Same goes for Clash, which couldn't possibly be more by-the-numbers. Days later, it's difficult to remember what the creatures even look like—or the leads, for that matter. This is the kind of film you forget while still watching it.

It made me long for that peculiar robot owl. ✖✖✖

Duvall as a curmudgeonly AA aficionado only adds to the phoniness. These brave performances deserved better. (At West Newton and in the suburbs.)

The Ghost Writer ★★★ ½ It's not my job to weigh in on Roman Polanski's personal issues. Sure, I'd never let him within a mile of my underage cousins, but The Ghost Writer is such a superlative example of craftsmanship that I walked out of the theater on a cloud. Adapted from Robert Harris' novel, this is a humdrum potboiler polished to a very fine sheen. Ewan McGregor gives his least-offensive performance in years as a hack writer assigned to wrestle the unwieldy memoirs of a transparent Tony Blair stand-in (strikingly well-played by Pierce Brosnan) into something publishable. What matters isn't the plot but the air of malevolence that Polanski brings to every seemingly innocuous conversation. He creates suspense without cutting, positioning the camera slightly off-axis for long takes that induce a sense of overwhelming dread. There's a casual elegance to these compositions, and Polanski displays an old-school command of the medium. Not a great story, but they just don't make 'em like this anymore. (At Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and Stuart Street Playhouse.)

The Greatest ★ ½ Here's a big, soppy chunk of grief-porn from first-time writer/director Shana Feste. An annoyingly perfect first date between high-school sweethearts Bennett (Aaron Johnson) and Rose (Carey Mulligan) ends with the former being run over by a truck. Three months later, his lover shows up on his parents' doorstep, pregnant with nowhere else to go. As the grieving father and mother, Pierce Brosnan and Susan Sarandon overact with gusto. Brosnan's trying to be the strong one, holding everything inside, while Sarandon bawls, lashes out and embarrasses herself. Schematic to an almost mathematical degree, the movie also makes room for a drug-addicted kid brother (Johnny Simmons) wallowing in his own grief in tear-jerking close-ups. Mulligan tries to hold it together with dignity, and she shares a couple touching scenes with Brosnan before he degenerates into weeping bathos. Feste obviously has something to share about the stages of grief, but the film is so rigged and soap operatic that the human moments are drowned in sap. (At Kendall Square and West Newton.)

Green Zone ★★ Director Paul Greengrass alternates between harrowing docudramas like Bloody Sunday or United 93 and the whip-smart, blockbuster satisfactions of his Jason Bourne sequels. Teaming with his muse, Matt Damon, Greengrass attempts to merge the two forms with this propulsive action-adventure loosely based on Rajiv Chandrasekaran's nonfiction best seller, Imperial Life in the Emerald City. Set in Baghdad during the summer of 2003, Green Zone stars Damon as a no-nonsense grunt who's shocked to discover that there are no weapons of mass destruction. The problem here is that Greengrass' two skill-sets cancel each other out, as his knack for packing the jittery frames with verisimilitude is drowned out by the dopey demands of Brian Helgeland's crowd-pleasing screenplay. The quagmire in Iraq is too complex a scenario to serve as backdrop for composite villains and pat resolutions. Damon is terrific, as always, and Greengrass crafts some suspenseful set-pieces, but the fictional happy ending is an insult. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Greenberg ★★★ ½ That person you wanted to be in your 20s is embarrassing at age 40. Writer-director Noah Baumbach, who helmed such cringe-fests as The Squid and the Whale and Margot at the Wedding, hits squirm-overdrive with this tale of a maladjusted rebel house-sitting in L.A. while his brother's family tours Vietnam. Adrift in poolside ennui, Ben Stiller's Roger Greenberg seethes and insults according to ancient reflexes, alienating those around him for maximum discomfort. He doesn't understand adult notions of compromise and turns all his interior self-loathing and disappointment outward against the world. His character is unbearable, but the attitude comes from someplace genuinely painful. Only his brother's hapless 20-something assistant, played brilliantly by the bewitching Greta Gerwig, can break through Greenberg's armor of sarcastic aggression. She's too good for him, but you'll root for them to get together all the same. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square [illegible] Waltham Embassy.)

How to Train Your Dragon ★★★ This is an unusually adorable CGI adventure from Drea Works Animation, best known for the noxiou Shrek series. Jay Baruchel voices a stumbleb Viking named Hiccup who aches to befriend dragons instead of slay them. Much to the chagrin of his Hagar the Horrible–looking da (Gerard Butler, in his first tolerable movie), young hero spends the bulk of the film cozying up to a moody creature nicknamed Tooth less and teaching kids a valuable lesson abou kindness conquering aggression. The story i familiar one, with echoes of Avatar during t vertiginous 3-D flying sequences. But the m is disarmingly sweet and strikingly well-cra Directors Dean DeBlois and Chris Sanders were responsible for Disney's charming 200 oddity Lilo & Stitch. This one doesn't feel qu as fresh, but it gets the job done with rousin action sequences and a great orchestral scor John Powell. (At Boston Common, Fenway a in the suburbs.)

It's Complicated ★★★ There's such a lightne to Meryl Streep's work these days—even in something as wretched as Mamma Mia!—th she seems to be having the time of her life. Same goes for Alec Baldwin, whose middle-aged paunch has unleashed his inner comed Writer/director Nancy Meyers honestly doe have to do much besides put these dynamos together and let them riff. Playing a couple that's been divorced for a decade, Streep an Baldwin drunkenly hook up the night before their son's college graduation and spend the of the movie negotiating the horny aftersho Baldwin's remarried to a bitchy younger wo (Lake Bell, harshly photographed to give St the advantage) while Meryl finds herself in tentative courtship with Steve Martin's ser tive architect. Like most Meyers movies, th one wallows uncomfortably in ostentatious displays of wealth. But there's no denying t giddy chemistry between Streep and Baldw They're both having so much fun it's contag (In the suburbs.)

A Prophet ★★★ ½ A best foreign-language Oscar nominee, Jacques Audiard's enterta gangster epic is a story about pluck and in ity working in all the wrong ways. Tahar R stars as Malik El Djebena, a helpless young who enters jail as an illiterate thug, only t blossom into a modern-day Michael Corle over the span of six years. Savagely beaten his arrival and bullied into a murder by a r less gang of elderly Corsicans, El Djebena etly assimilates to prison life and works ev setback to his own Machiavellian advanta Audiard slyly comments on France's chan racial landscape, as the old-school Corsica ruling the roost gradually find themselves outnumbered by their Arab counterparts. diminishment of entrenched power opens world of opportunity for the ever-alert pr tagonist, and Rahim's remarkable perform expands as his character's confidence gro Djebena manipulates gangs and plots agai one another in a cunning chess match, wi amoral, crowd-pleasing results. (At Kend Square.)

Shutter Island ★★★ ½ Martin Scorsese's I is a work of malevolent ambience that wor spite of the occasionally lame story it's try tell. This is a Technicolor phantasmagoria almost exclusively through the point of vi of its tormented, guilt-ridden antihero. Le do DiCaprio's federal marshal Teddy Daniels rives on a hyperbolically forbidding island Boston Harbor to investigate the abrupt sappearance of a mental patient at a hospital here rumors of mind-control experiments run mpant. It's an exercise in style, with a brilant filmmaker flexing his muscles on inferior aterial. Scorsese telegraphs "the twist" in the pening moments, asking the audience to see ne film as something scarier and more subantial than the simple narrative trick pulled n Dennis Lehane's novel. The earlier you figure ut the "surprise" ending, the more rewarding he movie becomes as a portrait of denial and elf-hatred. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in he suburbs.)

e White Ribbon ★★★ Michael Haneke, the arsh, professorial director behind Funny ames and Caché, loves to punish his audience. His latest, which won the Palme D'Or at last ear's Cannes Film Festival, is no exception. ilmed in high-contrast black-and-white with Haneke's usual air of viciousness and lack of nusic, The White Ribbon tells the sad, elliptical ale of a small pre-WWI German town infected with casual sadism. There's something reminiscent of Village of the Damned in Haneke's presentation of the town's children, tormented by their vicious, dictatorial parents until animal abuse and casual acts of torture are practically inevitable. Like his other films, there's a dazzling command of formal cinematic technique in the service of a one-note thesis. Haneke's attempting to depict Nazism in prepubescent form. The White Ribbon is a bit too easy and pleased with itself but still impossible to shake. (In the suburbs.)

GYPSY KINGS

Gogol Bordello translates its transcontinental kick to the studio.

Gogol Bordello plays House of Blues on April 28.

GOGOL BORDELLO CAN certainly throw a relentless party with its chaotic, communal live shows. But Eugene Hütz has a different view. "For me," says the manic, mustached ringleader of the theatrical Gypsy-punk band, "it was never about the party.

"Our stage show was always a natural reaction to the music—it was never really anything else," says the Ukraine-born Hütz, 37, who was a rock-worshiping teenager when he discovered Gypsy folk music through Roma relatives. "We have a gift for instigating this ruckus on the spot, but it just comes out of the culture."

nstead, Hütz shares pride in songcraft in lyrics, which reveal a sociopolitical bent, in taut arrangements where his nine-piece emble friskily marries Gypsy music with k and cabaret. They've honed that craft Trans-Continental Hustle, a new album April 27. It's produced by Rick Rubin, best wn for his work with Johnny Cash and the Hot Chili Peppers.

Our goal was to make a record where song- ting was at the forefront," Hütz says, citing u-like producer Rubin's interest in "song n art form" and in cultivating the material. ore than anything, it was about becoming nds, listening to music and talking about life, and craft."

Although Gogol Bordello's past CDs were l-received, the group has primarily thrived tage. Madonna gave a global audience a taste en Hütz and fiddler Sergey Ryabtsev joined for the Gypsy raveup "Lela Pala Tute" at 07's Live Earth concert.

But Hütz, whose multi-ethnic band hits use of Blues on April 28, says, "People were l missing the point—that our music is pow- ul not because it's so Eastern European or psy or this or that. Its exotic values are quite ondary to us."

Trans-Continental Hustle, which opens h "Pala Tute," gains power as Gogol Bor- lo's broadest, most-focused studio outing. e breakneck gallop of "Immigraniada (We Comin' Rougher)" draws contrast from "Sun on My Side" and "When Universes Collide," where the haggard-voiced Hütz shares romantic melancholy.

Hütz says he avoided putting love songs on past CDs. "I wanted a hardcore audience for the hardcore band," says the wiry singer and acoustic-guitar dervish. "I thought anything romantically spirited would draw a softer audience. But that still didn't work. The majority of people at a lot of our shows are girls."

"In the Meantime in Pernambuco" reflects the raucous frevo-carnival music of Rio, where Hütz moved two years ago with his then-girlfriend. He ended up exploring Brazilian culture with friend Manu Chao, a fellow multilingual musical provocateur.

"That song's about me hanging out with Manu in Pernambuco and getting down with frevo and all the street masks, and making a mask ourselves," Hütz says. "And it's about the incredible hospitality you will receive, I believe anywhere in the world, if you show no fear.... Showing fear to people is to announce your disrespect, and a lot of it is about respecting the rules."

Hütz continues, "I was trying to bring solidarity to all these poetic energies from different struggling parts of the world." A hardened traveler long before he launched Gogol Bordello (named after Russian novelist Nikolai Gogol) on New York's Lower East Side in 1999, he and his parents left Kiev in the wake of the Chernobyl nuclear accident in 1986. They passed through Eastern European refugee camps in Poland, Austria and Italy before settling in Burlington, Vt., through a relocation program.

"I got into a little punk-rock scene here [in Burlington]," Hütz says from his parents' home, "and once I knew the language and had some songs I thought were strong, I went to New York."

His father had played in one of Kiev's first rock bands in the '70s and remained a force at parties. Hütz takes "the family tradition" a step further with his no-fear chutzpah, climbing into Gogol Bordello crowds that churn with danger and joy.

"Just give me a microphone and I'm ready to go," says Hütz, who adds that he doesn't even stretch before a show. "You want to be able to be spontaneous with the situation. When you have the tools and did the homework, the battle is going to be easy." ✖✖✖

Fruit of the Rock Gods

Saving Bass

What started as a social-action experiment developed into the unstoppable dub/trance hurricane known as Bassnectar. Once a best-kept secret of electronic fanatics, Bassnectar is gaining mainstream popularity with its mashups of songs by Nelly Furtado, the Pixies and other recognizable names. Founder Lorin Ashton describes the San Fran–based music project as "omni-tempo maximalism." Figure out what that means at House of Blues on April 22.

In Benin, Dave Cowell and his students—Awe, Adjognon, Affidji, Mousse, Kassa, Minantey, Nouanti and Ognin—studied us in their "How to Write Punny Headlines" class.

Christopher Cercone and Christine Reynolds walked 100 km on the pilgrim road to Santiago de Compostela, Spain, sustained only by an ascetic diet of tapas, aged ham and dry white wine.

Sarah Muller, Kari Eagan and Abi Ingalls went to their friend Larissa Huskins' wedding in Carolina, Puerto Rico. The concrete lions, sadly, had a little too much to drink at the reception.

Former "American Idol" contestant and Boston College senior Ayla Brown attended our Boston's Best judging dinner. She picked us as the winner in the "Best Magazine to Pose With" category.

SHADES OF PLAY

Keys, Please

Fairy tales tend to unfold in castles, often with a ball taking place somewhere along the way, which may explain why Boston Ballet's Black, White and Brilliant gala, held at the Park Plaza Castle, was such an enchanted evening.

A tribute to mega-benefactors Henri and Belinda Termeer, the black-tie dress-code complemented the black-and-white decor, although a few Jezebels flouted the rules by wearing bright colors. But Truman Capote is dead, and I digress. Cocktails were accompanied by chatter, and dinner was punctuated by the opportunity to rub elbows with the likes of Nashville thoroughbred Trevania Henderson and the dapper John, Louisburg Square hipsters Chris and Hillary Gabrielli, North Shore nymph Andrea Osbon and her knight in shining silver hair, John, astute collector and irredeemable aesthete Juan Prieto, and international jewelry and interior designer Hutton Wilkinson, visiting from L.A. and wearing Burmese-star-ruby shirt-studs and cuff-links that I was sorely tempted to steal. The afterparty, meanwhile, offered the opportunity to rub body parts on the dance floor with members of the company and late arrivals like fashi-yoga-lista Betty Riaz and her posse of hot, swarthy guys (I recognized one of them as her husband, Ali), pocket pal Sam Mendoza, design guru Rich Cobb, the impeccable Jean Paulynice, accomplished party animal Andy Levine (gotta love a guy who turned his love of travel, wine and biking into a sweet life) and others too spine-tingling to mention.

In fact, the only sour note was the woman overheard at the curb at the beginning of the evening, loudly asking if there was a garage nearby, because "My husband has a Ferrari, and he does not want it valeted." For some people, living in a fairy tale apparently isn't good enough.

Talk Is Cheap, Unless You're Talking to a Lawyer

How many lawyers does it take to fill a hotel ballroom? More than you can shake a summons at, and despite all the hot air, you can still squeeze in a famous conductor/expectant father-to-be.

The latter would be Pops maestro Keith Lockhart. (Congrats, to him and his wife Emiley, who wasn't there because exactly a week later, on April 1, she gave birth to the 8 lb., 7 oz. Edward Keilan Lockhart. Our apologies to Edward for the infinite number of April Fools' jokes he's going to hear in his life.) The former, meanwhile, included honoree Judge Nonnie Burnes and many of her esteemed colleagues who were at the Copley Plaza to celebrate the inner-city school program Discovering Justice. No one knows how to throw a cocktail party like a bunch of senior partners, mucho much-needed dinero was raised for a good cause, and lawyer jokes flew fast and furious. Our favorite: One Back Bay doyenne, referring to her daughter at Georgetown, said "We're going to have a lawyer in the family. I want to throw up."

Retail Therapy

Champagne and shopping? The AIDS Action Committee knew exactly who to invite to the opening of its newest Boomerangs consignment shop in the South End. Some of the city's biggest fashion whores turned out, among them: shopaholics Gary Sullivan, Ricardo Rodriguez and Tony Corey with their long-suffering other halves, Mark Young, Michael Kelley and CJ Menard, Kelley's dapper brother, Bobby, clothes horse Susan Callender, Beacon Hillions Peter and Elizabeth Georgantas, designer Daniela Corte, and so on and so forth, who could rationalize picking up a little retro Etro by bringing in bags of their designer castoffs. But at least none of them bought back their own stuff.

Kids Say the Darndest Things

Disney World never made me cry until I saw how many sick kids want, more than anything in the world, to go there. A Tale of Wishes, a gala for the Make-A-Wish Foundation, was held at the InterContinental, which may not be Cinderella's castle, but it has better bartenders. Front and center were attendees like emcee, anchor babe, former pageant winner and Disney princess runner-up Liz Brunner, the gorgeous triumvirate of Tamar Salter Frieze, Kristan Fletcher and Tonya Mezrich with their respective other halves (who couldn't be seen because of the blinding light emitted by the ladies), and honoree Justine Williams, the 10-year-old who said, "I got to meet Zac Efron, and he kissed me on the cheek, but best of all, the cameras missed it, so he had to do it again."

But the kid after my own heart was Michelle Kats, who said, "When they first asked me my wish, I said, 'to meet David Bowie,'" while the kid I wish I'd been at her age was Johanna Brait, a wish-recipient who's now cancer-free and raised more than $26,000 for the foundation. Here's wishing they all live happily ever after. ✖✖✖

He had me at shaved nutmeg. Clio bar manager Todd Maul makes the most of the spice in a new concoction that pays tribute to tiki. As Maul blended the rum-based brew, we swapped parenting stories and iPhone pics. Which pretty much describes my ideal drinking experience: an unexpected cocktail and easy conversation.

Of course, the key ingredient in this equation is a talented bartender. For the 16th year, we devote an issue to the industry's best, including cover girl Carlina Maldonado, whose fan base extends to her fellow honorees. Meanwhile, Maul appears in our Hall of Fame—a group as enduring as tiki.

BEER ME ROAR

TEXAS HAS LONE Star. Pennsylvania has Yuengling. But until Mark Hellendrung revived the defunct Narragansett Brewing Company in 2005, New England lacked a native blue-collar beer. Now its retro label appears in hipster bars throughout the region. "We're shipping our millionth case this [month]," says Hellendrung, former president of Nantucket Nectars. Next year he hopes to rebuild the actual brewery in Rhode Island, as production is currently based in (gasp!) New York. "We're on a good pace. I've got a meeting with the mayor next week."

The restaurant-starved residents of Lincoln just reeled in a prized catch: Uni alum Chris Chung. Manning the helm at Aka Bistro with partner Christian Touche, Chung wields a sharp gyu knife to slice slabs of lab-farmed, low-mercury kindai toro. The first of its kind in the Boston area, the fatty belly-meat rivals—some say bests—familiar bluefin. Here it pairs pristinely with sweet miso-sherry–based mignonette, micro shiso, and the snap-crackle-pop of pickled mustard seeds and caviar beads. ELIZABETH BOMZE

Nicely Chilled

Drinking too much wine might wreak havoc on your body, but what about soaking in it? Hoping for a light buzz via osmosis, I head to the Spa at Rowes Wharf for its Chardonnay massage with Caroline Klein, a 13-year veteran of the space. Klein explains that the nonalcoholic oils—consisting of grape-seed extract, jojoba, macadamia nut and coconut—help hydrate the skin and provide a coat of natural antioxidants. Following 60 minutes of Swedish-style massage, I smell like a gracefully aged wine, with the relaxation that comes after a few drinks. Who needs bars? AMANDA KNORR

TEE PARTY

There's nothing as quintessentially American as starting your own business—particularly when it involves pictures of motorcycles and flags. A bartender at 51 Lincoln by night, Peter J. Glenn spends his days designing T-shirts under the label J. Newbury. Cofounded with Jonathon Spencer, whom he met working at a Newbury Street restaurant, Glenn describes their creations as "understated, but interesting," playing off 1950s graphics, movie stars and themes like "retro beach." Plus, the tees are made from organic or reclaimed cotton—so their very fabric is timeless. "We don't look like we're European," says Glenn, 26. "But that doesn't mean that we can't look good." HAYLEY MILLER

Going Out

House Rules

Close your eyes and imagine a new restaurant. From Somerville to the South End, pick a location and follow the trend. According to the zeitgeist, you'll be a gastropub or modern saloon serving small plates. You'll have cask ales. You'll incorporate seasonal vegetables in rustic dishes that put an upscale spin on comfort food.

"WE WENT OUT OF OUR WAY TO AVOID THE WORD 'COMFORT.'"

"We went out of our way, in everything we do, to avoid the word 'comfort,'" Russell House Tavern co-owner Peter Lee asserts. The team behind Grafton Street and Temple Bar isn't rowing completely against stream: There's still a local-leaf salad ($5) and a heritage-pork trio ($23), but you can go to innumerable elsewheres for your meatloaf or mac 'n' cheese. Explains chef Michael Scelfo, "I feel like this place is a tip of the cap to what Cambridge and Harvard Square was supposed to be. I think it's classically inspired food with twists." A euphemism, maybe, but he presents evidence.

A crispy soft-poached egg with house pancetta ($7) riffs on the archetypal frisée and lardon salad. In addition to claws and clams, composed dishes are prepared at the upstairs raw bar, like torched tuna ($13) with basil and spicy anchovy oil. As for cocktails, former Drink bartender Aaron Butler presents favorites like the Seelbach ($12) and originals like the Harvard Yard ($9) with rye, Dubonnet rouge, Benedictine and allspice dram. Things sound potentially pleasing, so couldn't one apply "comfort" to anything?

"Just the seats," Scelfo says.

ISLAND HOPPING

The oyster is your world.

IN THIS TOWN, it's a question as ubiquitous as award-winning clam chowder: Where do you go for seafood in Boston? The ambitious folks behind the Island Creek Oyster Bar think they'll have the answer nailed when they open in late-summer in the former Great Bay space in the Hotel Commonwealth.

Given the trio of partners—Jeremy Sewall, Garrett Harker and Skip Bennett—confidence comes from credentials. Sewall is chef/owner of Lineage and executive chef of Eastern Standard Kitchen & Drinks. Harker is the hospitality-minded proprietor of the latter. Bennett is the founder of Island Creek Oysters in Duxbury.

Another change at the Hotel Commonwealth: Farewell to the Foundation Lounge. You'll have to dance off your shellfish somewhere else.

IN BRIGHTON, Jacky Robert and business partner Loic Le Garrec have opened Chez Jacky on Comm. Ave. in Zocalo's old location. More casual than Petit Robert Bistro, the new spot is primarily targeted at college students and families. But the prices ($6.75 for all starters, from pâté to steak tartar) and the dishes—coq au vin, tripes Provençale—are sure to attract PRB fans as well.

WILLIAM KOVEL, formerly executive chef at Aujourd'hui in the Four Season Hotel, has a new gig: He's serving as consulting chef at 28 Degrees Restaurant and Lounge in the South End. Currently, Kovel's revamping the spring menu for what the restaurant calls its "social modern American cuisine." Dishes designed for the whole table to share include mini lobster rolls with madras curry and truffled parmesan fries with house-made condiments.

RUM THING
Last Drink on the Last Page

Drink of the Moment

SHAKEN UP

Before Clio gets a structural redesign, the restaurant's GM Erik Hynes and bar manager Todd Maul have updated its cocktail scene. The hope is that Maul's new drink menu will be the first stage in merging Clio's bar with the livelier atmosphere at Uni, the sushi spot downstairs. "Things were getting a bit stuffy," Hynes explains. "The goal is to go from relative obscurity to right in the mix with the best cocktail programs in the city."

Taking advantage of Maul's exhaustive knowledge, what was once a modest list has become an encyclopedic tome, offering everything from rickeys to fizzes to flaming volcano drinks for two. Designed to complement the sushi, the offerings start with aperitifs like the SUN RISING ($9), which showcases Japanese whiskey, the latest foreign distillation to make waves. Says Maul, "The function is to shake your taste buds and say here comes some really funky, fun stuff."

The 80-cocktail menu ends, cheekily, with the LAST DRINK ON THE LAST PAGE ($13). A zealot for the tiki concoctions of Trader Vic, Maul's spin mixes dark rum, Punt e Mes, lemon juice, orange juice, apricot liqueur, bitters and shaved nutmeg—calculated to act as more than just a garnish to this fruity booze bomb. As he explains, "It's like the tannins in red wine, so your taste buds hit reset." An appropriate response at a bar where things begin anew.

SURVIVORS

The long half-life of murder

THE SHOCKER HERE SWIRLS quickly, taking you by surprise: A man murders his wife and wounds one of his daughters. Those little sisters—responsible, serious Lulu and needy, loving Merry—become the surviving family duo and provide the alternating voices of the book. With their father in jail, their two sets of disturbing grandparents play out respective loyalties and miseries in ways that hardly cushion the children. Then they're kicked off to an orphanage where Dickensian horrors prevail. In the next phase, a family semi-adopts them. Author Randy Susan Meyers delivers a nuanced picture of this new milieu with its dignified, socially conscious and intellectual tone. Charitably taken in, the girls still feel out of place.

The Murderer's Daughters

by Randy Susan Meyers

Meyers, who lives in Boston and worked at a batterer's intervention program, is donating a portion of the book's proceeds to the Home for Little Wanderers.

The story continues into their grown-up years. Lulu marries and has daughters, while Merry floats more chaotically, finally working in the domestic-violence field. A therapeutic undertaking at first, Merry's reactions to her clients roil with interesting complexity. The sisters' lifelong conflict focuses on dad. Merry yearningly visits him in jail for years; Lulu protects herself by completely cutting him off. Meyers makes the voices of each girl—and their different ways of feeling and dealing—novelistically rich, and their dilemmas poignant. The book is venue-various, and she covers a lot of ground. ✖✖✖

"They might release your father. It could be as soon as this spring."

"My father's been saying that crap forever. He's not going anywhere."

"And if he does?" Drew followed me into the bathroom. "What then, Lulu?"

"Then nothing. He's still dead to us."

"He's not dead to Merry."

Nick and Choose { NICK ALTSCHULLER }

LOCHED & LOADED

Nick drinks like a Scotsman.

BACK IN FEBRUARY, IN AN ITEM sandwiched between a workout for six-pack abs and an article on how the right haircut can tone your tummy, Men's Health declared Boston the nation's least-drunk city. We don't drink and drive. Our livers produce bile of unassailable quality. Our health should be a source of pride, but I can't be the only one who immediately wanted to challenge Reno, Nev., to a chugging contest.

It seems everyone is drinking less. Between 1980 and 2007, per-capita consumption of alcohol in the U.S. dropped 17 percent. In Canada, it's 24 percent. In Germany, a country where liters of beer are regularly guzzled from boots, they're drinking 30 percent less. Thankfully, the U.K. still knows how to party. Nineteen percent more people are waking up with a headache, nausea and a stranger in their bed.

Scotland the bravest

In Scotland, the major culprit is Buckfast Tonic Wine, or bottles of phosphate-fortified grape juice packed with eight Cokes' worth of caffeine. For a ned—a Scottish hooligan—two or three dirt-cheap Buckies consumed in a filthy Glasgow alleyway gets the night going, all without the indignity of ordering a Jäger Bomb. The fear is that Buckfast might be too provoking. The Scottish government wants to ban it, and the stats give them reason. In the Strathclyde district, for example, the wine was mentioned in 5,638 crime reports in just the last three years.

Our government won't allow the import of "loopy juice," but the recipe isn't hard to improvise. I wanted to show Men's Health what's what, and maybe make a crime report of my own. Here's how things went down.

On Saturday at 7:30 pm, suspects Nick Altschuller and his friend John began mixing 1 ounce brandy, 2 ounces Red Bull and 6 ounces of red wine topped with Coke. Upon raising his glass, John remarked, "To the last thing we remember tonight."

8:30 pm: Two servings down, the accused found a trove of adrenaline-raising programming on television, including Rocky, Rocky II and Boston College in the NCAA Hockey Championship. As a BC grad, John didn't need the extra stimulation.

A twitching Nick noted that their speech appeared accelerated. "I think we're chatty drunk," John agreed, quickly. Witnesses confirmed they sounded like giddy secretaries at happy hour, as opposed to anything approaching manly.

9 pm: John began hearing things, causing Nick to giggle at 400 BPM.

10 pm: The duo found Lethal Weapon II on TV. In honor of Mel Gibson's performance, Nick demanded he be called Riggs for the rest of the evening.

10:30 pm: Out of Red Bull, the men switched to using Redline, an energy drink that comes with a 200-plus-word warning label advising consumers to keep the product away from children and nursing women. Both suspects agreed the taste improved.

11 pm: Out of Coke, the men switched to tonic. The defendants no longer cared about the taste.

11:15 pm: With all three bottles of wine gone, John mixed a different caffeinated cocktail. Using his last sober brain cell, Nick advised against it. John responded, "I'm doing this for fing literature!" Both men headed out to make some bad decisions.

Like paying a cover charge. Thinking a jug of alcohol and enough caffeine to reanimate a corpse could reverse time, we arrived at a bar where I spent many hazy hours in my youth. Times have changed, though. Sipping a Red Bull and vodka—for some ungodly reason—I stood in the middle of an empty dance floor, watching dozens of people queue for the party upstairs. With music blaring, I gave a shimmy, then a shake, but no moves could convince these youngsters that the only difference between the two floors was about 15 feet. Channeling my inner Murtaugh, I muttered, "I'm too old for this shit." Besides my pulse, things slowed from there. The most shocking thing to occur was arriving home by last call.

The next day, John studied for a finance exam. He may like to drink, but the man's got goals. I went for a run to flush my prized Bostonian organs. It won't be the last time I'm lambasted, but through experience comes beer-goggled hindsight. I'd rather be a Nick than a ned. ×××

SALAD DAYS

TO THE WOMAN WITH the neon-green nail polish and huge, faded "X" on your right hand (presumably from some awful club you went to the night before), who was ravenously devouring a trough of salad with no utensils on the Red Line during rush hour: Listen, watching you mow down fistfuls of greens, chewing with your mouth open, pausing only once to adjust your exposed, dirty-white lace bra was not a pleasant way to end the workday. Next time a favor? Bring a fork. A trainwreck observer

To the bouncer who let us back into the bar an hour after closing:
We panicked, and asked too much of you, but with only moderate hesitation you put your job on the line and saved an outstanding night from brimming doom. You strayed from the duty of your post, believing more strongly in man's duty to his fellow man. Or else you just saw from our faces that we really were about to pee ourselves, and you didn't want to have to deal with the mess. Either way, there's a big heart in your chest, and try as you might, you couldn't hold it in.
Feeling much better now, thanks

To the ahole on Avery Street:
You have the dirtiest, most disgusting toilet bowl this side of the Mason-Dixon line. No amount of polished good looks, impeccable manners or Brooks Brothers suits can take this honor away from you. At first I thought it was some sort of modern art etching in the bowl. You make enough money; the next time you experience explosive diarrhea of that magnitude, you ought to hire a cleaning lady. Still seeing spots

Dining { ERIN BYERS MURRAY AND BARRY MAIDEN }

DIRECTIONAL INFLUENCE

Asian fare gets the local treatment at East by Northeast.

"I'VE BEEN TRYING TO GET OUT more, get more inspiration," Barry Maiden said, as we sat down to dinner. The Hungry Mother chef had just completed a spring cleaning of his own menu. So our visit to Phillip Tang's East by Northeast, new to Inman Square, was well-timed. The two had worked together at Lumière in Newton before Maiden opened Hungry Mother, where Tang later served on the line.

"When he left, we said, 'We gotta hire another Phil Tang,'" Maiden beamed. "His attention to detail, a fresh set of eyes. All the things you want in a line cook but can never find."

Tang's approach and focus is evident in his concise menu: hand-rolled noodles and dumplings, house-baked breads, meat from a sustainable cooperative. His passion for local ingredients can be traced back to Maiden and their former boss, Lumière's Michael Leviton. But Tang, who graduated from l'Academie de Cuisine, credits his family as his strongest inspiration. His parents own Chinese restaurants in Annandale, Va., and Rockville, Md.

Following their lead, Tang features a selection of small plates at East by Northeast. We took our server's advice and each chose three. The first rang familiar with Maiden: five-spice boiled peanuts ($4), an addictive Southern snack with a smoky-sweet Asian kick.

A tribute? "A little bit," he replied modestly. Boiled peanuts have become a Hungry Mother staple. "But Phil's a Virginian. He has boiled peanuts in his blood."

As we picked at the pile, Maiden admitted he had peanuts on the mind. Before our meeting, he'd discarded that night's batch at Hungry Mother, as a miscommunication led to an undersalted lot.

MAIDEN VOYAGE Hungry Mother chef Barry Maiden digs into dishes like Jonah crab salad and taro fritters.

They were removed from the menu, and Maiden felt he only had himself to blame.

"My true passion is to be back there cooking, but we've grown to a point where I'm stretched thinner than I used to be," he explained. "Something like that shouldn't have happened."

A New England Culinary Institute grad and Army veteran, Maiden was named a best new chef by Food & Wine magazine in 2009. While honored, the disarming Southerner says the accolade came almost too soon. Fame turns into opportunities—cooking for events like Cochon 555 and the Food & Wine Classic in Aspen—but taking advantage requires time away from the kitchen. It's a culinary catch-22.

He shrugged away his concerns as a plate of crispy taro fritters ($7) arrived. The hot pockets of mashed, earthy root were offset by a cooling herbed mayo. We also devoured steamed pork belly buns ($10) stuffed with glazed, fatty slices and pickled vegetables.

Next, we dug into a bowl of shrimp dumplings ($10) served in a gingery broth and topped with cilantro. The dumplings, Maiden explained, were freshly rolled and wrapped individually. "They're not easy, but it works," he said.

We cooled our palates with a texturally balanced Jonah crab salad ($9) laced with bits of jicama and grapefruit atop an elegant egg custard. It was an exceptionally hot spring day, and we had found the perfect antidote. "These dishes are so refreshing right now," Maiden concurred.

Tang's newest noodle creation, a spicy sesame dish ($9), arrived brimming with marinated maitake mushrooms, fried tofu, crunchy cuts of fennel and carrot, and a hard-boiled egg soaked in tea then deviled. By stirring the egg into the noodles, you create a thickened spring stew. "This is so good," Maiden said. "I'd been thinking about fennel last night. Now, I come in here, and he's using it. See, this is inspiring."

Barry's Picks:
Taro fritters
Jonah crab salad
Pork belly buns
Spicy sesame noodles

As a final tribute to Maiden, Tang had prepared a cold peanut soup for dessert. Similar to another Hungry Mother offering, the liquid was just barely sweetened and served with three thimble-sized, sesame-crusted rice balls. Maiden dipped them into the soup and smiled.

"Seems very Colonial Williamsburg, Va.," he said with a laugh. "But it's Chinese home cooking, really. He's a good cook. I'm proud of him." ×××

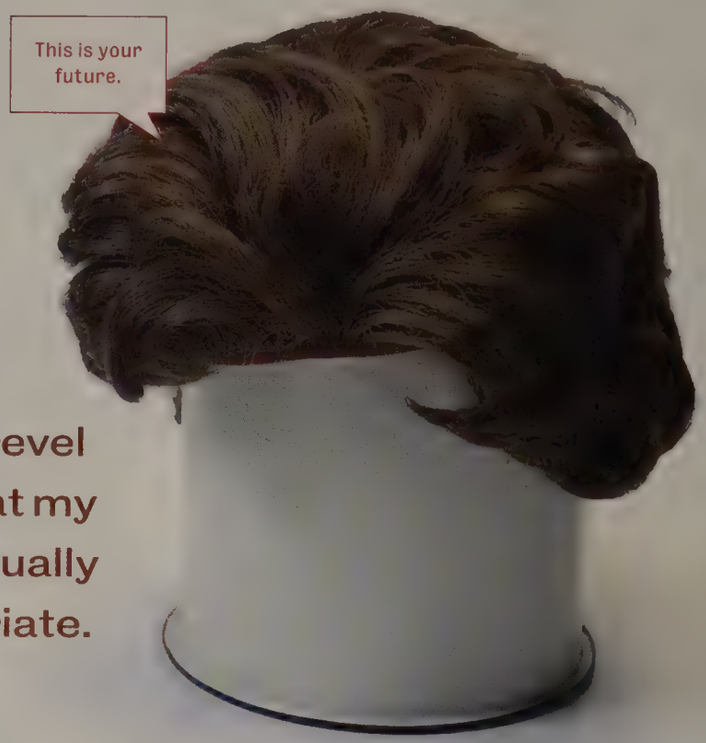
THE BALDING TRUTH

Our writer fits the male pattern.

I'M IN THE DOCTOR'S OFFICE, having my annual dermatology checkup to confirm that I'm still genetically related to the jellyfish. The doc asks if there's anything new that concerns me, and I point out a spot on my forehead, up near my hairline. I say, "I'm not sure whether that's new, or whether it's new that I can see it." He replies, "I'd say it's the latter. That's an example of what we call 'low-tide syndrome.' You see what's under the water when the tide goes out." Oh, you dermatologists and your catchy slang. I practically need Urban Dictionary to keep up.



The good news: I don't have skin cancer. The bad news: I've got a mean case of male-pattern baldness. But the other good news is that I've been sort-of bald for years. So balding isn't as traumatic for me as it will be (hopefully) for Justin Bieber. Consider that during my freshman year in college, 15 years ago, my friend Fleming referred to me as a "bald Mainer." And I was 24 years old when a guy cutting my hair abruptly slapped a toupee on my head to "show me what I'd look like with all my hair back." So I'm used to the idea that I'm balding. The question for me now is when to give up fighting it.

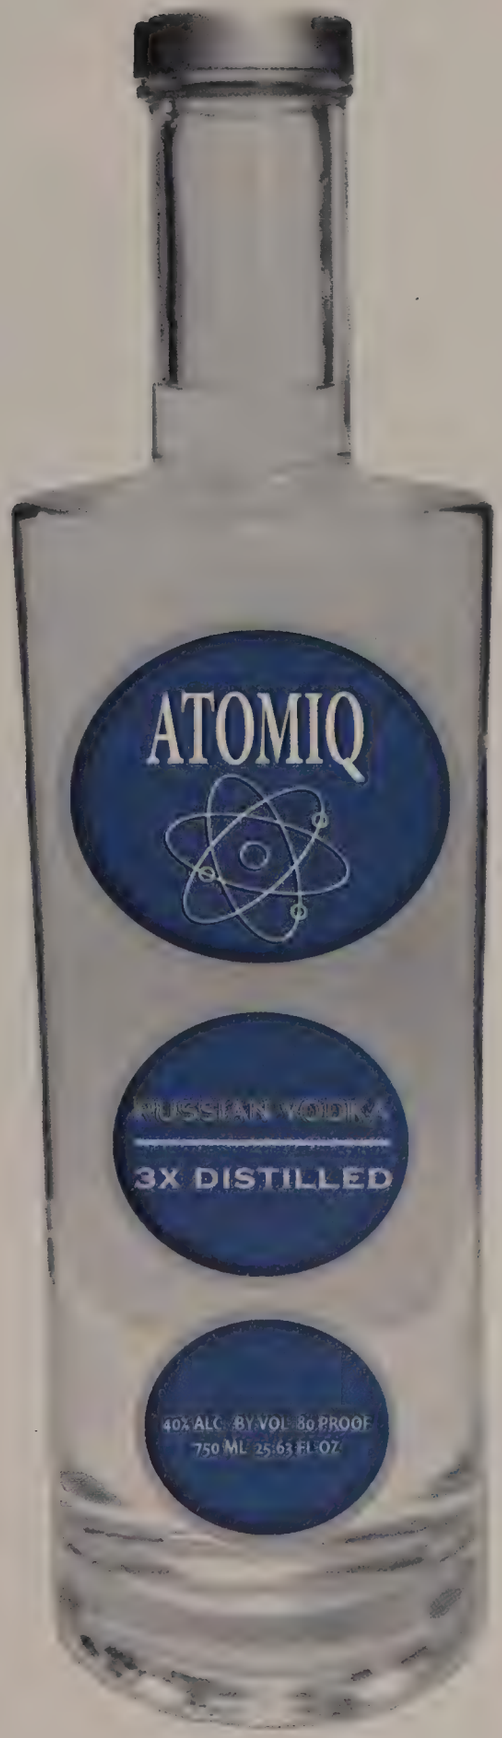
That's right, I've mounted a defense for the follicles I've got left. I go the chemical route—I've been taking Propecia for years. If you're not familiar with Propecia, it was originally developed as a prostate drug called Proscar. At some point, patients discovered a happy side effect of their prostate treatment: hair growth. Does it really work? I don't know, but my prostate feels awesome!

I suppose my naturally high testosterone level is a blessing and a curse. Sure, I have lots of body hair and a propensity for fistfights, but testosterone has its drawbacks, too. Namely, it causes your hair to fall out. That's why us tough guys tend to be bald while the sally boys have nice hair. Who'd you rather have next to you in a foxhole, Howie Mandel or Ashton Kutcher? Neither? Me, too. But that doesn't change the fact that Howie Mandel eats nails and craps broken whiskey bottles. All bald guys do.

While I had a good head start (no pun intended), my perception is that some of my formerly hair-having friends are gradually joining me on a one-way ride to the Chrome Thunderdome. And thanks to Facebook, it's easy to benchmark your status—through the miracle of technology, you can grow out of touch with friends but still instantly find out whether they're balding. Judging by his profile pic, Fleming—he of the "bald Mainer" tag—looks like he's fighting the fight right along with me these days. So I e-mailed him to gloat. I mean, to ask if he remembered calling me a bald Mainer back in 1995.

He replied, "Actually, I myself have been on the losing end of a battle with the baldies for a while now, and my prescribed treatment is extensive. It involves cutting my hair into a close wiffle once a week. Luckily I don't have any significant malformations on my head. And I thought better of getting that huge 'Ace of Base' tattoo on my head during college. But it's a maddening equation—about the only place on my entire body, other than my tongue, where hair does NOT grow is on top of my increasingly shiny domepiece. The cleanup efforts have led me to consider opening my own merkin factory."

I'm going to revel in the fact that my hairline is actually age-appropriate.



I applaud Fleming both for his self-honesty and for his use of the word "merkin." But his response prompted yet another question: At what point should I, too, give up on longish hair and just chop it off? I think the time is nigh. A few weeks after a haircut, I end up with a wispy widow's peak down the middle that looks ridiculous. I know this, and yet I'm too lazy to do anything about it. What am I supposed to do anyway? Use gel? Hair gel makes me look like an otter that ended up on the wrong side of the Exxon Valdez. A stupid, bald otter.

So decision time is looming. But for right now, I'm going to revel in the fact that—for the first time in my adult life—my hairline is actually age-appropriate. Having a high forehead when you're 18 is a difficult look, but when you're 32, you're in solid company with plenty of your peers. However, I may have to rethink my Halloween costume for next year. Unless iParty comes out with a really good Justin Bieber wig. ✖✖✖

MOVING ON

Age takes its toll on the Celtics.

THE LOS ANGELES LAKERS had already gone through the tunnel to their locker room when Kevin Garnett, standing on the parquet floor of TD Garden, spoke three words that I can still hear today: "Anything is possible!"

It was June of 2007. Of all the championships that the Celtics had won, that one seemed the unlikeliest. Other than a few blips of success, they'd been laughingstocks for nearly 15 years. There was a feeling around here that the little leprechaun's luck had run out.

But Danny Ainge pulled a Red Auerbach after the 2005-06 season, bringing in Ray Allen and Kevin Garnett, and Celtics Pride was restored. Garnett, assuming the role of a future Hall of Famer, made it clear that he'd only come to Boston if the Celtics acquired Allen. Which they did. He wanted a championship.

With Garnett, Allen and Paul Pierce, Ainge assembled the 21st-century version of the Celtics Big Three, all of whom were in their 30s. They beat our expectations by a year, winning championship No. 17 instantly.

And then we found ourselves facing a problem. We wanted more, but the Big Three, particularly the Big One, Garnett, got old. Garnett is now 33. He has played in the NBA since being drafted by the Minnesota Timberwolves six weeks after turning 19. In NBA years, he's a senior citizen.

Age has taken its toll. Even coach Doc Rivers—the man who knows this team better than anyone—admits he's not sure how his players will perform night-to-night. Did we ever say that about Larry Bird's Celtics in the 1980s? Today's stars are tired. A former Celtics coach once told me that playing 115 games—which is what the two teams in the NBA Finals do counting the pre- and postseasons—is too much for the body to endure on a year-in, year-out basis. Considering most NBA courts are placed over NHL ice, it's not surprising that basketball players' knees take a beating.

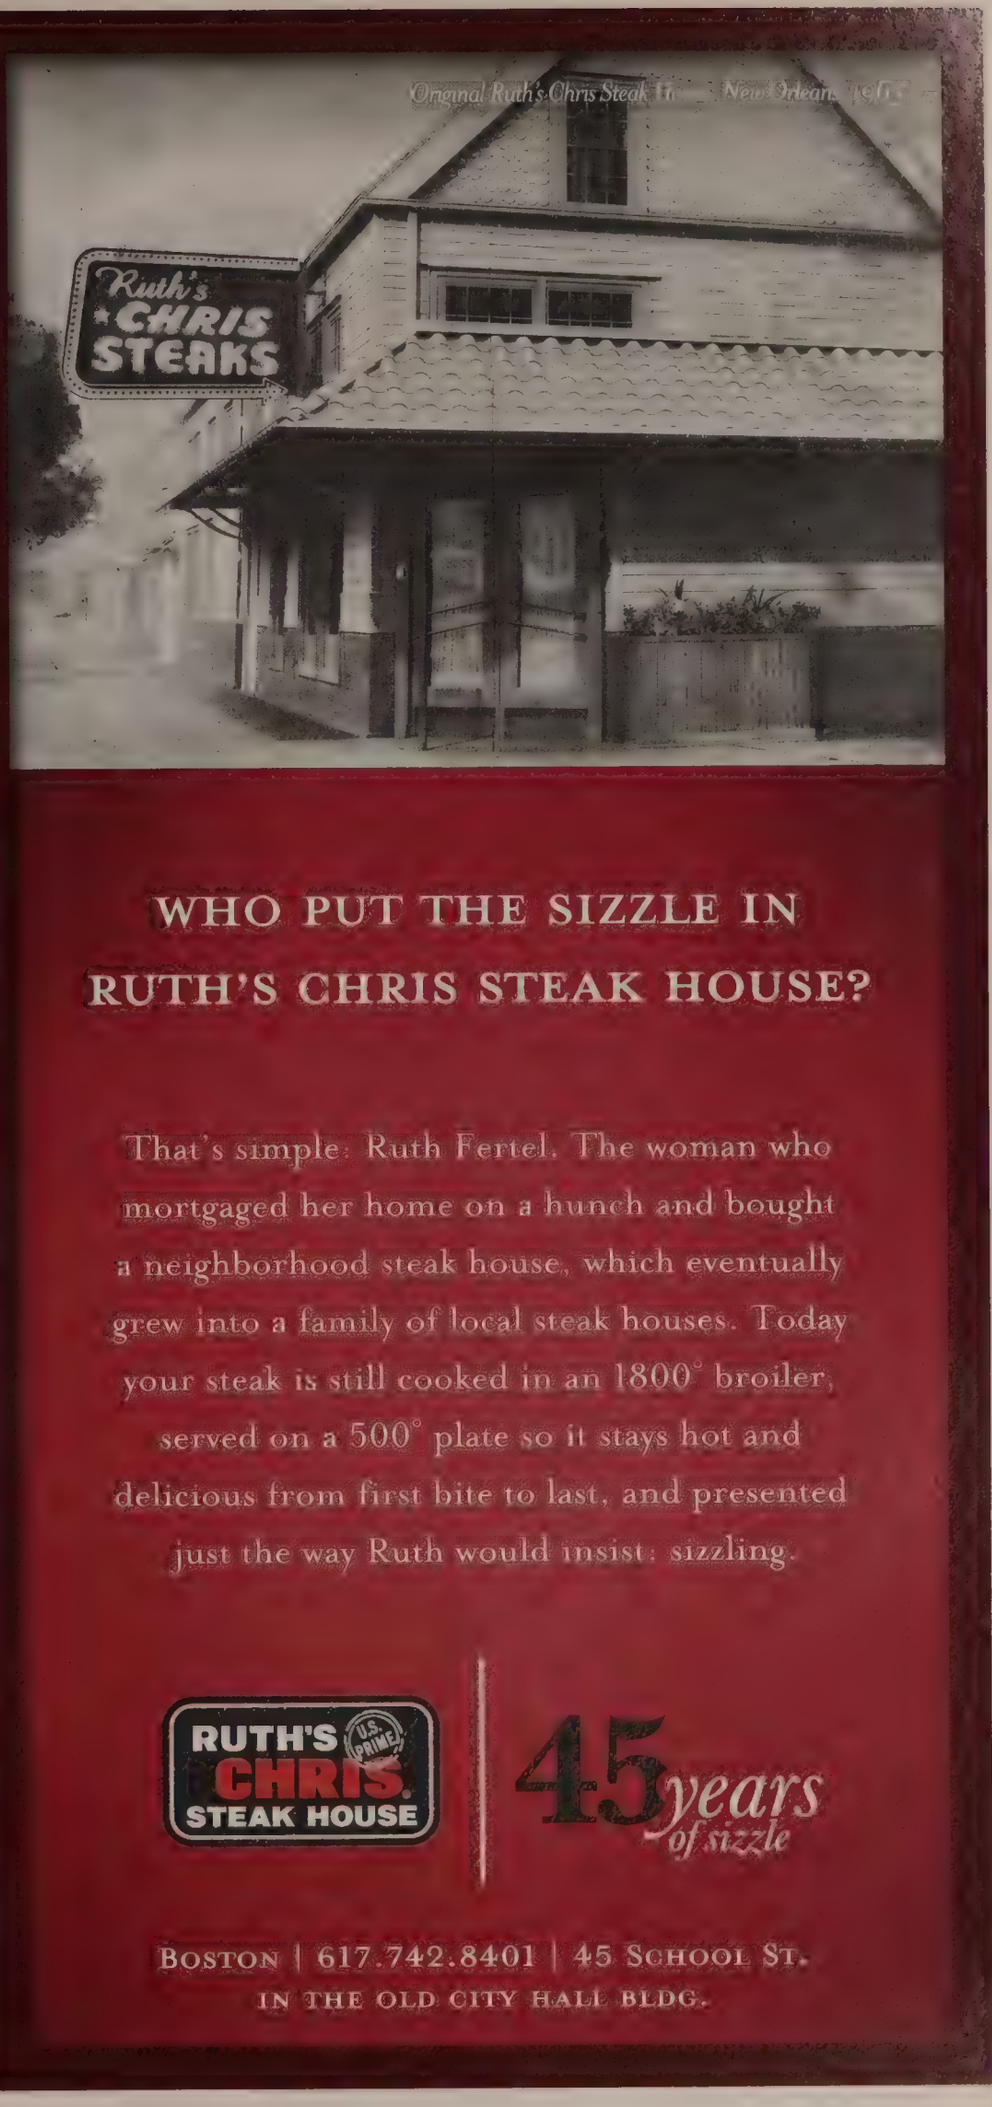
We wanted more, but the Big Three, particularly Kevin Garnett, got old.



Allen and Pierce have dropped lower this season, but Garnett has plummeted. Coaches and opposing players know this. Some of these players, who couldn't carry Garnett's jock when he was in his prime, are now getting the best of our big guy (though if you heard his trash-talking, you'd wonder whether he's aware of his own decline). They say the legs are the first things to go, and that's especially noticeable with Garnett, who, despite his height, once had the feet of a point guard.

The Celtics aren't getting much sympathy for their woes. They've been a little brash during this new era. And teams that were trampled along the way are looking for a piece of them. But I haven't given up entirely on a Celtics playoff run. I'll watch every possession as if it's their last. I'll dream that maybe they can win No. 18.

Of course, dreams usually don't come true. I'm a realist, and the Celtics' prospects don't look good. Rasheed Wallace was supposed to be a member of the Big Four, but instead he's been a big stiff. The team probably has one series win in it. But after that, it's the Cleveland Cavaliers. I'm not stupid enough to pick an upset in that one, particularly after the way Garnett mocked LeBron James after missing the game-winning shot in their Garden finale.

The Celtics have a promising future, though. Rajon Rondo may become a "franchise" player very soon, and the addition of one or two more younger stars could get the Celtics back on championship track. Nor would I criticize Garnett. He gave this organization every last ounce of his energy. He was worth every penny. In a reduced—and rested—position, he could still play a big role.

But do the Big Three have one more "effort" left in them? Could they amp it up and bring home banner No. 18? I don't see it. But I'd never bet against it. ✖✖✖

WHO PUT THE SIZZLE IN RUTH'S CHRIS STEAK HOUSE?

That's simple: Ruth Fertel. The woman who mortgaged her home on a hunch and bought a neighborhood steak house, which eventually grew into a family of local steak houses. Today your steak is still cooked in an 1800° broiler, served on a 500° plate so it stays hot and delicious from first bite to last, and presented just the way Ruth would insist: sizzling.

RISEN STAR Rajon Rondo

3 C's Playoff Thoughts

Realizing Rondo Here's the best indicator of how great Rajon Rondo has become: Everyone's stopped talking about it. It's no longer a surprise. He's just who he is—a Top-5 NBA point guard.

PG Problem This isn't a huge deal, considering that the guy mentioned above will be playing close to 40 minutes a night. But the C's have a backup point guard problem, and it's going to hurt them at some point in the playoffs. I say let Tony be Tony (aka, don't force him to dribble) and give Nate one more shot. You know he'll take it.

Ripping the Ticket Stub I've reached my breaking point with nicknames. Seriously, I'm done. So from here on out, Glen Davis will only be referred to as Glen Davis in this column. Example: Glen Davis deserves to be the Celtics' sixth man for the rest of the playoffs.

1 ONE REQUEST

Enough, Bill. I know. I know. Super Bowl XXXVI was the greatest victory of your career. We were all there. We all loved it. But come on. David Patten? Torry Holt? Just let it go. Or if not, at least sign Az-Zahir Hakim. That guy was badass.

5 RED SOX PROBLEMS

(IN REVERSE ORDER OF IMPORTANCE)

For Starters The problem most likely to work itself out is the starting pitching. But for now, it's a serious issue. The big three are slumping—and not even in relation to our expectations. They're Smoltzian! Vaughn Eschelmantastic! They'll figure it out, of course, but it's frustrating to even have to wonder.

Middle Ground A good defense is like a cream-filled donut: It's only as good as the middle. And right now, the middle of the Sox D is a nasty banana-flavored mess. V-Mart throws like Rube from Major League II. Scutaro's not bad, but he's clearly the weakest infield link. And, yeah, Cameron's a former Gold Glove centerfielder. But you know what? So is Willie Mays. So was Kirby Puckett. The word "former" isn't insignificant.

Caught Stealing I'm always impressed when a catcher throws a guy out at second base. I think it's one of the most difficult things to do in baseball. That said, if you're in the majors and are incapable of throwing a guy out at second, you're screwed. So are your pitchers. Your team, too. Not your fantasy owners, though. They don't give a crap.

Personality, Minus The Sox will always have talent, but in baseball, talent alone doesn't cut it. The season's long. It's tedious. You need a few animals in there to keep everyone loose. But Boston's starters are straightedge. Papi's always pouting. Papelbon seems jaded. Jacoby's too timid. JD Drew's a mute. Sure, Pedroia and Youk are fun guys, but they're so damn intense on the field. The team needs some personality, and the return of Dice-K won't help.

Power Outage Every time I look at the Sox lineup, one thing comes to mind: They're trading for Adrian Gonzalez. They have to, right? Right?! Sweet baby Jesus, just tell me they're making a deal! If not, I'll be forced to assume that Darnell McDonald's actually a cryogenically engineered, home-run-hitting cyborg. Take your pick.

THE CRAZIEST 4 WEEKS OF THE PATS 2010 SEASON

Week 10, at Pittsburgh: Unless he gets traded (or strikes again), this will likely mark Fat Ben's 2010 home debut. FYI: The league has already ordered extra security for the Heinz Field bathrooms.

Week 11, Indianapolis: Seven of the last nine Super Bowl losers have missed the playoffs the following season, so by Week 11, the Colts will be a mess. Peyton's ACL will be gone. Reggie Wayne will be bitching like T.O. Dallas Clark will be caught in a gay porn scandal. But whatever, a win's a win.

Week 12, at Detroit: You wouldn't typically eat lion on Thanksgiving, but in 2010, the Pats will be feasting. For the record, Matthew Stafford goes best with creamed spinach. Calvin Johnson? A nice raspberry vinaigrette.

Week 13, New York Jets: Sexy Rexy, LT, Jason Taylor and pretty much every other Patriots Nation enemy converge on Gillette Stadium. Honestly, how have these guys not signed Joey Porter yet? Oh, right, because he's terrible.

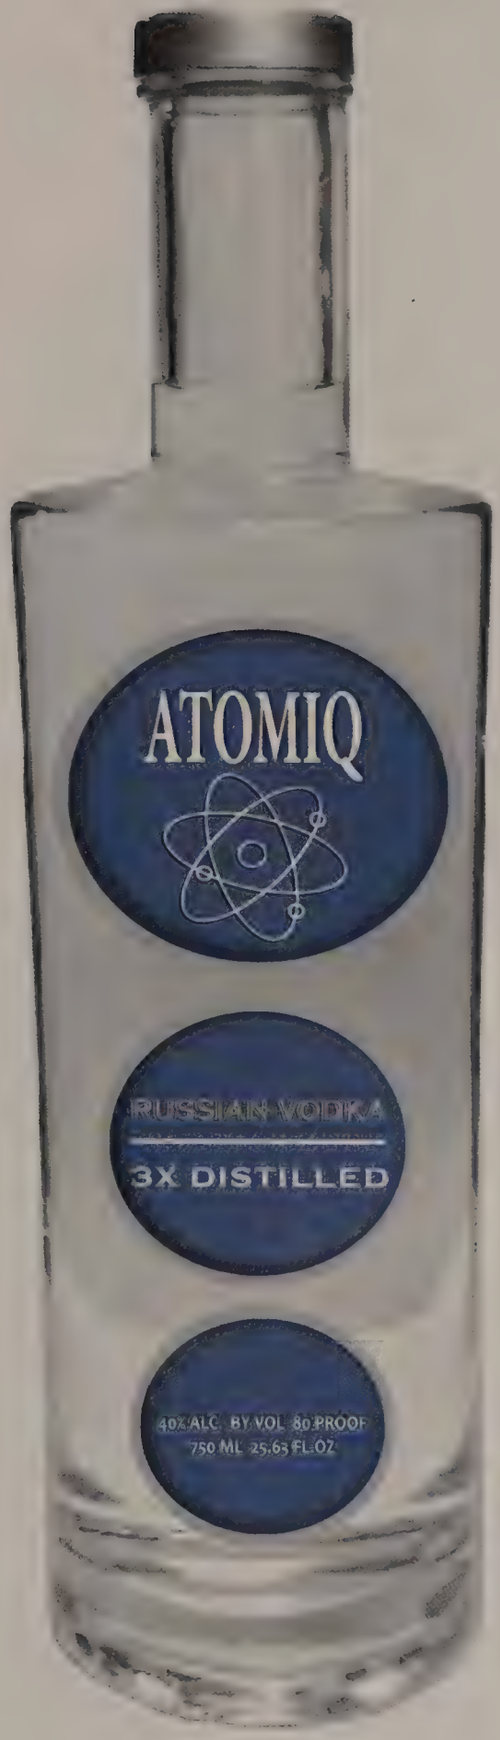
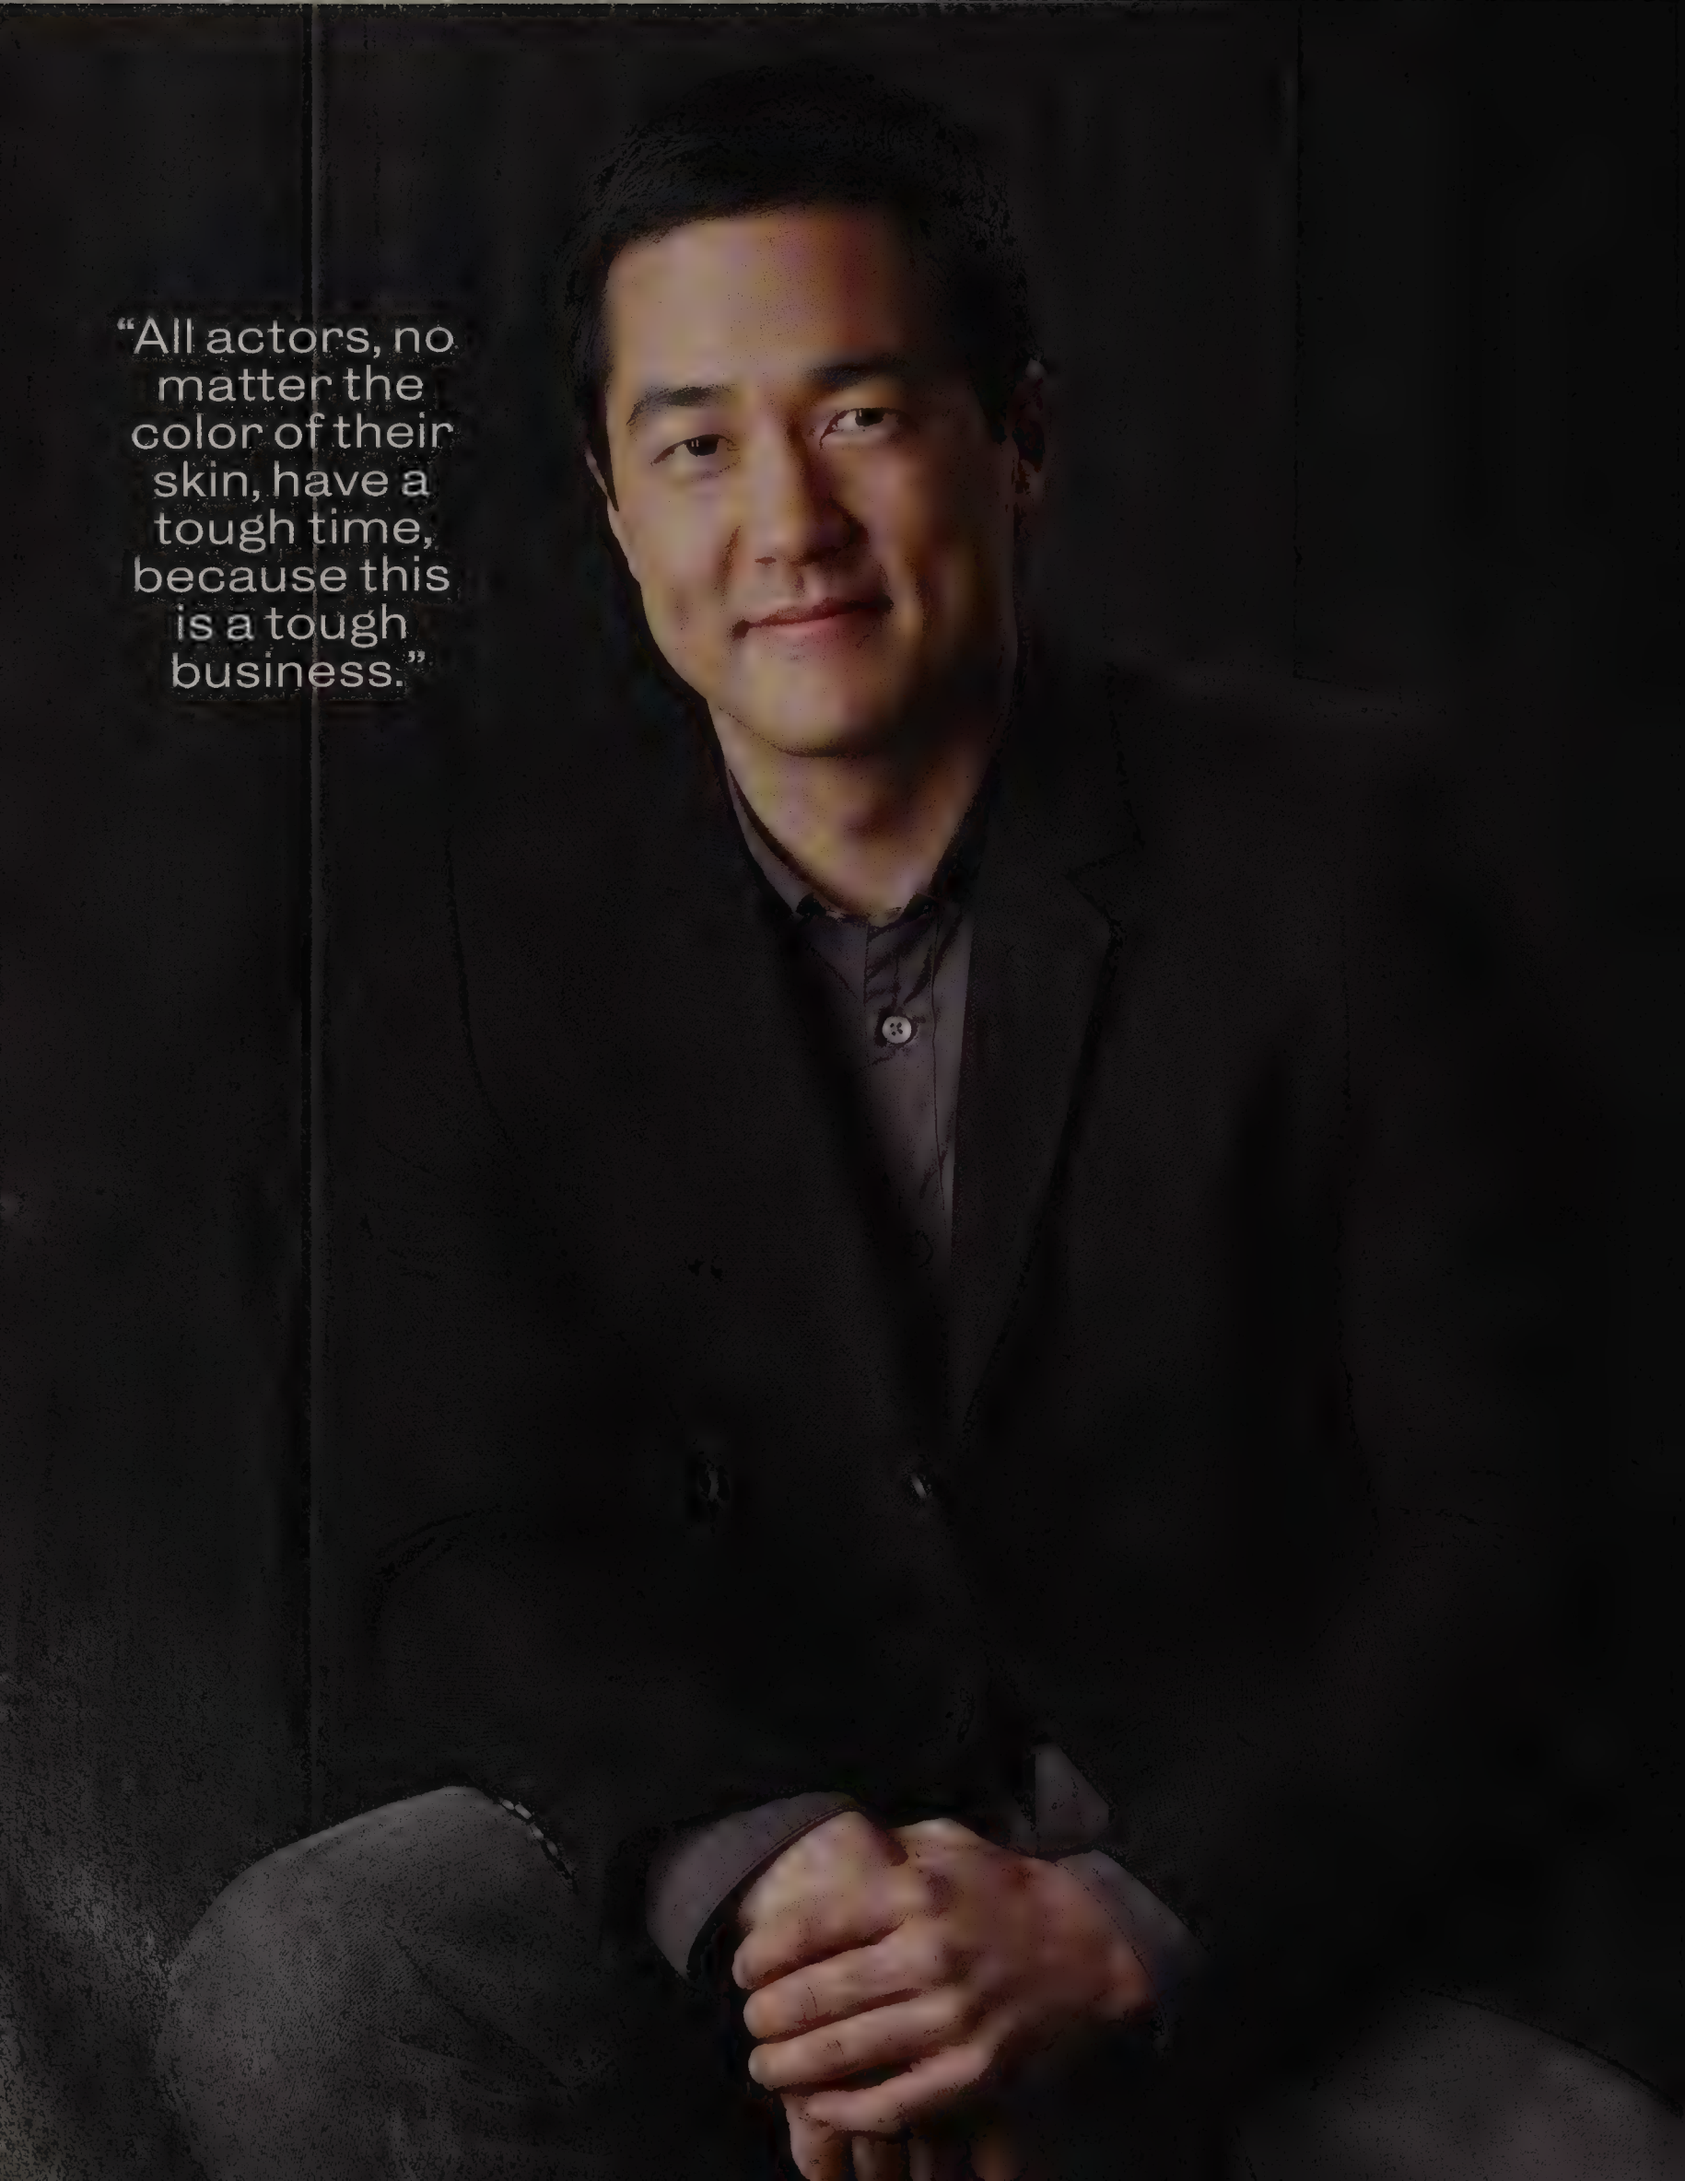
AND 2 FOR THE B'S



Rex in Effect Tim Wakefield gets a lot of credit for kicking around at 44, but there's nowhere near enough love in this town for Mark Recchi. Not only is he 42 and still a major factor for the B's, but the guy's playing hockey! That's like Wake floating the knuckler into his late 90s (which hasn't been ruled out by the way).



We're Not Worthy I love Miroslav Satan. There, I said it. I love everything about him. On the ice he's graceful as hell (not intended), straight-up deadly in the clutch, and he does it all with the deadpan charisma of Ivan Drago. (That comparison was a lot cooler back when I just assumed Satan was Russian. Nope. Slovak.)

Soroff On TIM KANG

The TV and film actor talks about psychics, stage nudity and sweating through Rambo.

CURRENTLY STARRING AS INVESTIGATOR KIMBALL CHO on the hit CBS drama The Mentalist, Tim Kang was born and raised in the San Francisco Bay Area. A graduate of UC Berkeley, Kang, 37, studied acting in Russia at the Moscow Art Theater School before receiving a master's in fine art from the American Repertory Theater Institute in Cambridge. He first came to prominence with a recurring role on Third Watch, but his TV credits also include The Unit, Ghost Whisperer, The Office, The Sopranos, Monk, Chappelle's Show and Law & Order. On film, Kang has appeared in Rambo opposite Sylvester Stallone, as well as Two Weeks Notice, Justice, The Forgotten and What Remains. This year, he stars in the title role in Greg Pak's Mister Green. He lives in Los Angeles.

Jonathan Soroff: So is The Mentalist basically just an update on Sherlock Holmes*?*
Tim Kang: There are definitely elements of Sherlock Holmes, for sure.

Last time you consulted a psychic?
That would be never.

You've never gotten your palm read at a party?
No. I've never had any kind of visit with a psychic in my life. [Laughs.]

What's the difference between a psychic medium and a psychic large or extra-large?
A psychic medium could probably tell you a few things about yourself, whereas a psychic large or extra-large probably wouldn't fit.

Do you believe in psychic powers?
Not at all, but some of the mentalist stuff I've seen is pretty amazing. I did once meet a guy who had me draw a picture, giving me little clues, planting things in my head, and I ended up drawing a very crude boat with a sail. The guy goes, "Is it a boat with a sail?" I was amazed, but as soon as he turned his head, I could hear something coming out of his ear. I'm convinced he had some kind of ear-piece.

Are you good at sensing when people are lying or trying to conceal something?
I'm the most gullible, dumbest person in that sense.

Do you need to be a good liar to act well?
Personally, I'm a horrible liar. Acting is more about being in tune with yourself.

What's your tell in poker?
[Laughs.] Probably the way I bet. If I have a crappy hand, I bet aggressively.

Who's a better detective: Monk, or the Law & Order guys?
Definitely Monk. He does it in a way that's a lot more interesting to me.

Biggest thing you learned at the American Repertory Theater?
After you've done all the work, let it go. If you think about it, it will be obvious in your performance. People can tell that you're forcing, or you're just not letting it happen. You kind of have to unlearn what you've learned and trust that it will resurface when it needs to.

Thing you miss most about Cambridge?
The intellectual stimulation. There was something just electric about walking to school every day.

Are you a huge star in Korea?
[Laughs.] I may be a huge star in Korea in my mind, but no. The Mentalist has a decent following there, but I don't think I qualify for star status quite yet.

What about Italy? I understand the show is wildly popular over there.
I didn't know that. I've received a few bits of fan mail, but more of it has been from Germany. I got a request for a signed photo, and the way he worded it was really odd and humorously demanding. "Dear Tim, I really love the show. Send me an 8x10 signed photo of yourself now!" So I did.

Any roles you regret?
Thankfully, no. Obviously, there's a lot of stuff out there for a minority actor that can be kind of demeaning, and I've been lucky enough to avoid that. Pretty much everything I've done is one step forward.

Even Rambo*?*
Hey! Take it easy on the Rambo! The Rambo was fun! But what I'm talking about is some of the soap opera stuff I've done, which was a really tiny bit part, with one line. Even that kind of stuff is positive. I cherish all of them.

Fantasy love-scene partner?
Oh, God. Let's see. I've not given that one moment of thought, but I'll go with Cate Blanchett. She's a babe.

Is it harder being an Asian actor in Hollywood?
It's the same amount of difficulty, it's just a different kind. All actors, no matter the color of their skin, have a tough time, because this is a tough business. Certainly I face different kinds of hurdles, but we're all in the same boat, really.

How much pressure do actors experience to look good?
It's definitely there, and I think it's probably a little tougher for women, but it's there for guys as well. I've always maintained a fitness regimen that kind of keeps me in line, and thank God for that, because I love junk food.

Most physically grueling part you ever did?
That would be Rambo. Shooting in the jungle in Thailand every day: 110-degree heat, 100 percent humidity, wearing all that gear, 16-hour days for almost three months. That was pretty tough.

Tell me something surprising about yourself.
I was the lead singer for a band in high school.

Most embarrassing thing you ever did in an audition?
Most of them have been fairly straightforward. But I did try out for this very out-there character, maybe a clown, and it was so forced, and I was trying to be funny, and you could hear the crickets chirping. Just god-awful.

Anything from a play or TV show that was humiliating?
I did Mother Courage at the A.R.T., and there's a sequence in that play where I had to run around on stage with my ass hangin' in the breeze. Especially embarrassing when you're doing it in front of a group of high-school students who are snickering. ■■■

Making the Grade

BY JONATHAN SOROFF
PHOTOGRAPHS BY DAVE BRADLEY

Whether you say cin-cin, sliánte, l'chaim, salud, prost, cheers, or bottom's up, you can't make a toast without a glass of something delicious. And you can't have a glass of something delicious without a steady hand on the beer tap, a measured eye with the rum bottle or a headful of clever recipes. That's why we salute our city's bartenders and take the trouble (namely, carousing in the name of investigative journalism) to find the best in the business. In today's bar scene, the job requires both an encyclopedic knowledge of classic cocktails and a nose for current trends. Unsurprisingly then, the class of 2010's signature drinks read like the pages of a mixology manual. Consider this issue your education. →

THE FRANKLIN CAFE, 278 SHAWMUT AVE., BOSTON (617-350-0010) FRANKLINCAFE.COM; MON. NIGHT

BOTTLED AND DISTILLED IN: NYC; raised in Boston.

BY DAY: I'm a professional comedian.

LEAST FAVORITE DRINK TO MAKE: Espresso Martini. Do you wanna be up or down? Make a damn decision.

WORST TRICK YOU EVER PLAYED ON A PATRON: A customer had me fill their Nalgene water bottle with water, drank it, and [then] had me refill it. I did it four times; the last time I filled it with gin.

PERSONAL POLICY ON DATING CUSTOMERS: Don't date customers; it never works out. Thank heavens no one ever gave my husband that advice.

DRINK OF CHOICE: Brown stuff neat or clear stuff on the rocks with a lime.

SIGNATURE COCKTAIL:
PBR & SHOT OF FERNET

1 SHOT GLASS
2 OZ. FERNET-BRANCA
1 COLD PINT GLASS
1 PINT COLD PBR
BEVERAGE NAPKIN OR COASTER

Pour Fernet-Branca into shot glass. Fill cold pint glass with PBR. Serve shot first, then the PBR on a beverage napkin or coaster.

THE BEEHIVE, 541 TREMONT ST., BOSTON (617-423-0069) BEEHIVEBOSTON.COM; WED., THU. AND SAT.; SILVERTONE, 69 BROMFIELD ST., BOSTON (617-338-7887) SILVERTONEDOWNTOWN.COM; OCCASIONAL FRI.

BOTTLED AND DISTILLED IN: Caracas, Venezuela.

YOUR TRADEMARK: My accent. Not too many people can figure out where I'm from (or what I'm saying, for that matter). But I guess it's not a secret anymore.

MOST INTERESTING OR ODD PATRON ENCOUNTER: About five years ago, an old regular approached me to pay his tab. When he handed it back, there wasn't any money or a credit card. Instead, he handed me a pair of kinky, electric-blue panties wrapped in a handkerchief. Disturbing! He wasn't allowed back at that bar ever again; we had a no paying-with-panties policy, thank God.

BEST TIP YOU EVER RECEIVED: After that guy gave me the pair of kinky panties, cash is really all I care about.

PERSONAL POLICY ON DATING CUSTOMERS: ¿Como se dice? Nooooo.

DRINK OF CHOICE: Any. I don't discriminate, but I've been putting St-Germain in everything I drink lately.

SIGNATURE COCKTAIL:
BOSSA DE BEEHIVE

1½ OZ. LEBLON CACHAÇA
½ OZ. SIMPLE SYRUP
1 OZ. (LES VERGERS BOIRON) PASSION FRUIT PUREE
2 LEMON WEDGES
MUMM'S NAPA "CHEF DE CAVES" SPARKLING WINE

Squeeze the lemons into a shaker. Fill with ice. Add the Cachaça, simple syrup and passion fruit puree. Shake well. Strain into a double rocks glass with ice. Fill with Mumm's Napa. Garnish with a lemon wedge.

THE SUNSET GRILL & TAP, 130 BRIGHTON AVE, ALLSTON (617-254-1331); MON. AND THU. DAY AND NIGHT, TUE. LUNCH, SAT. AND SUN. BRUNCH

BOTTLED AND DISTILLED IN: Greece. I worked in bars [there] for many years, but moved to Boston six years ago and fell in love with the energy, the diverse culture and everything that comes with that. For the last three years and two months I've been working at the Sunset, which keeps me occupied full-time.

RUMBA AT THE INTERCONTINENTAL BOSTON, 510 ATLANTIC AVE., BOSTON (617-217-5752) INTERCONTINENTAL BOSTON.COM; WED.-SAT. NIGHT

BY DAY: I love to paint—it's my therapy. Or I put on my headphones and beat myself up at the gym.

LEAST FAVORITE DRINK TO MAKE: A Bloody Mary when it's no longer [morning].

FAVORITE BAR TRICK OR JOKE: One of the latest was to put the name of a beer in a sentence. Considering that we have 500 different beers, many with names like "dirty blonde" or "old chub," it can be hilarious. I'm lucky to work with some very funny, clever people.

BEST TIP YOU EVER RECEIVED: $100 on a $110 tab on a very slow Monday night! They became regulars.

PERSONAL POLICY ON DATING CUSTOMERS: Just don't ask for my phone number. It makes you look desperate, and if I take it, it makes me look unprofessional.

BEST HANGOVER CURE: My Bloody Mary with Absolut Citron vodka... when ordered in the [morning].

SIGNATURE COCKTAIL: Bloody Mary Belgian strong ales and/or any unique beer that challenges my palate and [has more than] seven percent alcohol.

BOTTLED AND DISTILLED IN: Santos, a beautiful and vibrant little coastal city outside of Sao Paulo, Brazil.

HOBBIES/OTHER INTERESTS: Traveling. I love to experience new cultures. Japan was my most recent [destination].

DESCRIBE YOUR STYLE: I'm a social butterfly, but detail-oriented and fast-paced.

FAVORITE BAR TRICK OR JOKE: I don't think I'm funny, but one evening when Dane Cook was here, he told me that I was.

BEST TIP YOU EVER RECEIVED: This is an interesting one. I received $1,000. I served a couple a bottle of Cristal. They only ended up having one glass each and then left.

HANGOVER CURE: Banana.

DRINK OF CHOICE: Grey Goose, soda water and a splash of cranberry.

SIGNATURE COCKTAIL: ABSOLUT BERRY AÇAÍ

MUDDLED BLUEBERRIES, STRAWBERRIES AND ICE
1 PART AÇAI VODKA
1 PART LEMONADE
A DASH OF SIMPLE SYRUP

Shake and serve on the rocks.

BEAT IT

DRINKERS COME OUT OF THEIR SHELLS

However you like your eggs, they generally arrive on a plate. But as flips return to fashion, get ready to take them in a glass. "The universal reaction when you see a raw egg is, 'Eww what's that?'" says Eastern Standard's Jackson Cannon, whose cocktail menu features a section entitled oeuf. "People don't really want to try them right away. But then they see it's all about pleasant texture." Cannon offers two drinks to make at home.

TOM SAMPH

LE GRANDE FLIP

1 oz. Applejack
½ oz. Benedictine
½ oz. orange juice
½ oz. Diabolique
1 whole egg
2 bar spoons sugar

Dry shake, add ice and shake, strain into a coupe glass, garnish with orange twist.

PISCO SOUR

1 ½ oz. Pisco
1 oz. simple syrup
¾ oz. lemon juice
1 egg white
Dash of bitters

Dry shake, add ice and shake, strain into a chilled lowball glass, garnish with Angostura Bitters.

LEAST FAVORITE DRINK TO MAKE: Water after last call.

FAVORITE BAR TRICK OR JOKE: I like to roll myself up in the bar mat and pretend I'm burrito. Always gets a laugh.

DRINK OF CHOICE: Depends entirely on the situation. My favorite would have to be in a biergarten overlooking the Rhine while drinking a nice Dunkelweizen (dark wheat beer).

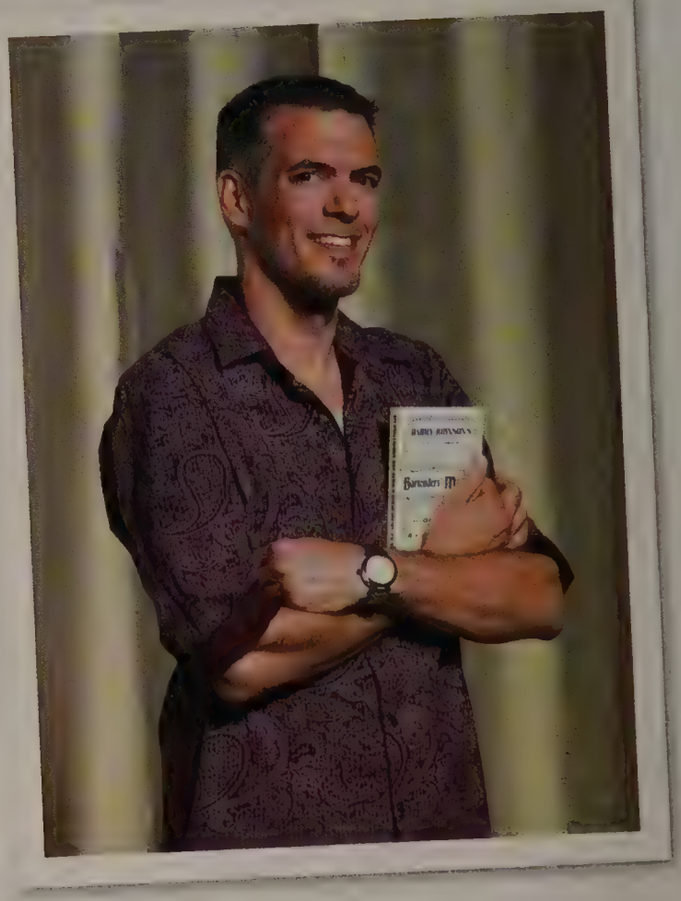
SIGNATURE COCKTAIL: To all you beer geeks out there: On a hot day, throw a shot of banana nectar into a proper Weizen...the most refreshing beer you've ever had.

Scott Marshall ↓

DRINK, 348 CONGRESS ST., BOSTON (617-695-1806) DRINKFORTPOINT.COM; TUE.-SAT. NIGHT

DESCRIBE YOUR STYLE: Harry Johnson... late 1800s. A formal but fun party host.

DESCRIBE WHERE YOU WORK: The ultimate bartenders' sandbox!



HOW WOULD YOUR REGULARS DESCRIBE YOU? "Salt-and-pepper hair."

MOST INTERESTING OR ODD PATRON ENCOUNTER: Having somebody I went to high school with walk up to me and ask if I knew who Scott Marshall was, and make me show them my ID to prove I was me!

FAVORITE BAR FOR YOUR OFF NIGHTS: Silvertone, Eastern Standard.

FAVORITE BAR TRICK OR JOKE: When somebody asks me to "break a hundred," I tear the bill in half and hand it back to them, saying, "That's not even a challenge!"

SIGNATURE COCKTAIL: Grip an ice-cold bottle of Miller High Life firmly in your left hand with the label facing out. Grab the cap with your right hand and twist in a counterclockwise motion

BOTTLED AND DISTILLED IN: Staten Island, N.Y.

DESCRIBE YOUR STYLE: I'm a flashy bartender. I flair bottles, flip cups, do trick pours, etc.

DESCRIBE WHERE YOU WORK: The best nightclubs in Boston. High energy all night, and every type of music you can imagine, from house to hip-hop, Top 40 to '90s. I get to work and hear some of the best DJs and singers in the world. It's great.

BEST WAY TO HANDLE A DRUNK: Hand them water, tell them to go dance it off and come see me in an hour.

LEAST FAVORITE DRINK TO MAKE: Anything with milk.

PERSONAL POLICY ON DATING CUSTOMERS: I'm a firm believer that you shouldn't mix business and pleasure. It never ends well.

DRINK OF CHOICE: Crown Royal and Diet Pepsi.

SIGNATURE COCKTAIL: THE TAHITIAN

½ OZ. BACARDI COCO
½ OZ. BACARDI SUPERIOR
½ OZ. STOLI RAZBERI
½ OZ. MIDORI
EQUAL PARTS OJ, CRANBERRY AND PINEAPPLE JUICE

Mix, pour and garnish with a cherry and a lime.

Joe Black

W LOUNGE AT W BOSTON, 100 STUART ST., BOSTON (617-261-8700) STARWOODHOTELS.COM; THU.-SAT. NIGHT AND OCCASIONAL MON. AND TUE. NIGHT

BOTTLED AND DISTILLED IN: Charlestown. But I learned my craft in New Orleans, Miami and Las Vegas.

DESCRIBE YOUR STYLE: I take pride in the craft of tending bar, so some days I'm a psychiatrist, listening to problems, and other days (most days), I'm a clown doing bar tricks.

MOST INTERESTING OR ODD PATRON ENCOUNTER: I had a guest recently drink the water out of a flower arrangement on the bar with a straw. I hope Winston doesn't use any chemicals in their arrangements.

BEST WAY TO HANDLE A DRUNK: Very carefully. They tend to vomit. But seriously, with respect. They're just drunk. We've all been there.

BEST WAY TO GET YOUR ATTENTION: Don't wave. A wave means "Hi!" [Tell] the person next to you, "I'm trying to get the bartender's attention" when I'm within earshot, or just a simple "Excuse me."

HANGOVER CURE: Water, sleep, aspirin and a burger from Abe & Louie's, medium-rare, with cheddar and caramelized onions, in no particular order.

DRINK OF CHOICE: A Woodford Manhattan, perfect: Peychaud's New Orleans bitters, shaken vigorously, straight up with a twist and brandied cherries.

SIGNATURE COCKTAIL: POMM FIZZ

2 BLUEBERRIES
½ OZ. SIMPLE SYRUP
1 OZ. POMEGRANATE JUICE
1 ½ OZ. SKYY VODKA
1 OZ. CHAMPAGNE/SPARKLING WINE

In a mixing glass, muddle blueberries with simple syrup, pomegranate juice and vodka. Shake, pour into a cocktail glass, then top with Champagne/sparkling wine.

BOTTLED AND DISTILLED IN: Saugus, Mass.

DESCRIBE YOUR STYLE: Equal parts clown and psychiatrist.

YOUR TRADEMARK: My lime-green bottle popper. And I wear my belt buckle on my right side.

BEST TIP YOU EVER RECEIVED: Monetarily, $500 on a $30 tab. Advice-wise, "Never stop smiling; positivity is contagious."

BEST WAY TO GET YOUR ATTENTION AT THE BAR: I tell guests to "throw something at me," but no one ever does.

PERSONAL POLICY ON DATING CUSTOMERS: Been there, done that. And I wouldn't do it again.

HANGOVER CURE: Put on the biggest pair of sunglasses you own, grab the largest Coke (on ice) you can find and pair it with a huge, juicy burger (my favorite is from Joe's American Bar & Grill). After that, sleep half the day.

SIGNATURE COCKTAIL:
"BOUCHÉE SANGRIA"

1½ OZ. BLUEBERI STOLI
½ OZ. MASSENEZ CRÈME DE MURE
2 OZ. CRANBERRY JUICE
MÖET & CHANDON NECTAR IMPERIAL

Combine in that order in a wine glass full of ice. Squeeze in 1 lemon wedge and 1 lime wedge. Top with Möet & Chandon Nectar Imperial.

Sabrina Wilhelm

NOIR AT THE CHARLES HOTEL, ONE BENNETT ST., CAMBRIDGE (617-661-8010) NOIR-BAR.COM; TUE.-FRI. NIGHT

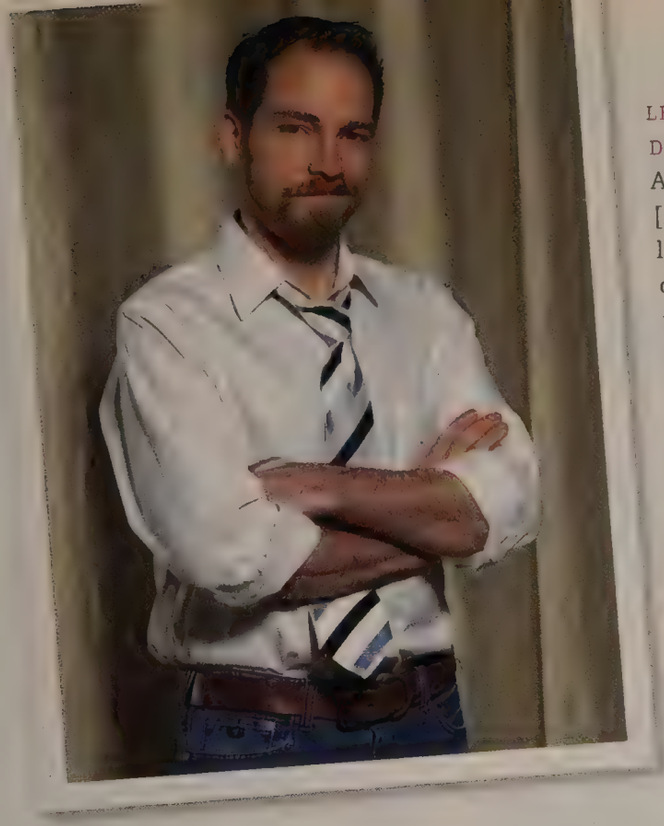
BOTTLED AND DISTILLED IN: Honolulu, Hawaii; grew up mostly in Nashua, N.H.

YOUR TRADEMARK: If I had to pick something, I'd say my shake (I mean how I shake my cocktails, of course).

HOW WOULD YOUR REGULARS DESCRIBE YOU?
"The girl with the tattoos."

MOST INTERESTING OR ODD PATRON ENCOUNTER:
At a restaurant where I worked previously, we had just opened and didn't have our beer and wine license yet. When we told a man sitting at the bar the bad news, he reacted by throwing the napkin holder across the bar and [storming] out.

LEAST FAVORITE DRINK TO MAKE: I don't really have one, but if we made Mojitos at Noir, that'd probably be the one. I just don't think people really enjoy them.



WORST TRICK YOU EVER PLAYED ON A PATRON: Four years ago, at another bar, I had some very rude, non-tipping guests who wanted shot after shot after shot. I made them shots of sour mix and cranberry juice all night. They kept saying how much they loved them.

DRINK OF CHOICE: I drink almost anything. It depends on my mood. If I don't want to think about it, pinot grigio, but I also like bourbon and ginger ale, Manhattans, Old Fashioneds, vodka soda, Miller High Life. Really, whatever's around sometimes.

SIGNATURE COCKTAIL:
THE "CAN YOU MAKE ME SOMETHING WITH GIN AND ST-GERMAIN?"

1 ½ OZ. BOMBAY DRY GIN
1 OZ. ST-GERMAIN
JUICE FROM HALF A LEMON

Combine all ingredients in a cocktail shaker with ice, and shake vigorously. Strain into a chilled martini glass, and garnish with a lemon twist.

LEAST FAVORITE DRINK TO MAKE:
A Cement Mixer [A shot of Bailey's and lemon or lime juice that curdles in your mouth]. It's never as funny as you think it's going to be.

BEST TIP YOU EVER RECEIVED:
A little old lady gave me a portrait she sketched of me while sitting at the bar.

Hugh Reynolds ↑

TEMPLE BAR, 1688 MASS. AVE., CAMBRIDGE (617-547-5055) TEMPLEBARCAMBRIDGE.COM; TUE., THU.-SUN. NIGHT

BOTTLED AND DISTILLED IN:
Sherborn, Mass., primarily.

DESCRIBE YOUR STYLE: I'd describe my bartending style as adaptive. I change it to fit the customer or situation.

DESCRIBE YOUR REGULARS: They tend to be anyone from students and professors to local residents and industry people. There's quite a broad range.

MOST INTERESTING OR ODD PATRON ENCOUNTER: The oddest regular I've had was a clown (literally) who would arrive in costume, overindulge and then make inappropriate advances toward the waitstaff.

BEST WAY TO HANDLE A DRUNK:
With care and respect, even when they may be undeserving of it.

SIGNATURE COCKTAIL:
BLOOD-ORANGE GIN FIZZ

2 OZ. HAYMAN'S OLD TOM GIN
1 OZ. FRESH BLOOD-ORANGE JUICE
½ OZ. FRESH LEMON JUICE
3 DROPS OF ORANGE-BLOSSOM WATER
½ OZ. HALF AND HALF
SMALL EGG WHITE
SPLASH OF SODA

Combine all ingredients in a shaker without ice or soda, and shake vigorously—the idea being to emulsify the egg white and create a huge froth. Orange-blossom water is very strong, so use it sparingly. Add about a cup of ice and shake quickly, just to cool. Strain into a highball glass and top with soda until the froth rises slightly above the rim of the glass. Garnish with an orange twist.

BOTTLED AND DISTILLED IN:
Spokane, Wash.; raised in Silverton, Ore., in the Willamette Valley and in Chiapas, Mexico.

BY DAY: I'm a dancer. Flamenco is my biggest passion.

DESCRIBE YOUR STYLE: Relaxed and intuitive. I can make you a drink I know you'll love just by talking to you for a few moments.

DESCRIBE WHERE YOU WORK:
Modern yet cozy. Think Tokyo industrial chic.

DESCRIBE YOUR REGULARS:
Sexy and sophisticated, classy and comfortable, like chilled sake, riesling, or a lychee martini.

MOST INTERESTING OR ODD PATRON ENCOUNTER:
Discussing politics with Gore Vidal while pouring his Scotch at the Gotham Tavern in Portland, Ore.

BEST TIP YOU EVER RECEIVED:
I've had a few customers bring me mint-condition vintage items that they thought I should have. My favorite is a tailored Yves Saint Laurent tuxedo jacket from the '60s that fits me like a glove.

SIGNATURE COCKTAIL:
IKEBANA BOSTON

2 OZ. ABSOLUT BOSTON VODKA
¾ OZ. DRY SAKE
SPLASH OF FRESH LEMON JUICE
SPLASH OF LAVENDER-INFUSED SIMPLE SYRUP

Shake on ice and serve up in a chilled martini glass with a twist of lemon.

BOTTLED AND DISTILLED IN:
Kiltimagh, County Mayo, Ireland.

WHY DO PATRONS RETURN TO YOUR BAR AGAIN AND AGAIN?
It's comfortable, consistent and great craic. Also, the late-night crew does love a good singsong.

YOUR TRADEMARK: I like to scratch a smiley face into the foil on the top of a bottle of Magner's. I've done it for years, and it's guaranteed to make them smile!

HOW WOULD YOUR REGULARS DESCRIBE YOU? "The crazy Irish bartender that's always singing."

WORST TRICK YOU EVER PLAYED ON A PATRON: I still feel bad about this one. I was working at a bar in New York, and one of my regulars came in for lunch. I gave him a fake "Million Dollar Winner" scratch card. We both agreed that if he won, I got half. Well, we got quite busy, and I forgot all about it. A couple of hours later, I'm upstairs eating my own lunch, and I hear all this screaming and roaring downstairs. I fly down to see what's going on, and very quickly realize that the poor fella has just scratched the card. He thinks he's won a million dollars and is celebrating with the whole bar. Needless to say, when I told him to read what it said on the back—"Please claim your prize at the North Pole"—he was not only mortified but genuinely gutted. He didn't hate me for it, but never quite liked me the same after.

HANGOVER CURE:
Before 12 pm, a bottle of Magner's over ice will sort me out. Any later, a pint of Stella with some 7UP in it does the trick.

DRINK OF CHOICE: Beer... most any I'll enjoy, but I steer clear of the fruity ones.

SIGNATURE COCKTAIL:
I wouldn't really say I have a signature cocktail, but I do take a huge amount of pride in pouring and presenting a great pint of Guinness.

BEST TIP YOU EVER RECEIVED: A guest once told me "circumcised," quote-unquote!

DRINK OF CHOICE:
Virgin sangria. No. 2 choice: Ketel, rocks, lime.

SIGNATURE COCKTAIL:

BOTTLED AND DISTILLED IN: Palmyra, Pa. (Pennsyltucky, whoo!)

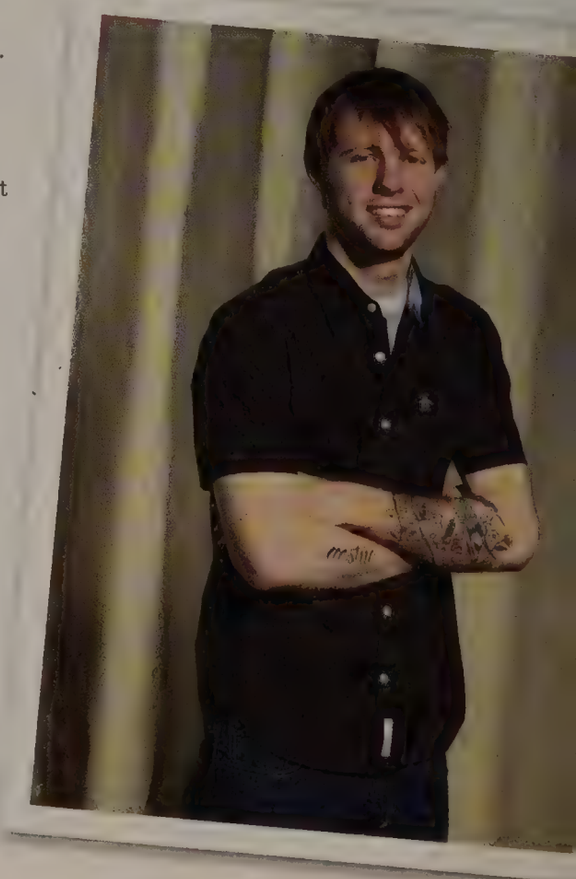
DESCRIBE YOUR STYLE: Part psychiatrist, part babysitter and full-on car salesman. I really have to talk the beers through to get people to… expand their palates.

HOW WOULD YOUR REGULARS DESCRIBE YOU? People come in and say, "Are you the guy on that T-shirt?" Our old GM, Remi, made a T-shirt with an awful picture of me on it that says "Superfan" for all of the beer dorks who come in to talk to me. So, I guess, "The smiley guy on the T-shirt."

LEAST FAVORITE DRINK TO MAKE: Fuzzy Navels. A trained chimp could make them, and I just think it's a gross drink. Also, single malts or small-batch bourbons with fruit juice or flavored soda. I get that a lot, and I just don't understand the logic behind it. No offense, and I'll make you whatever you want, but sometimes I just feel like saying, "You sure about that?"

BEST TIP YOU EVER RECEIVED: I cut a guy off one night, and he became the typical "Maybe your face has had too much Duvel!" drunk dude. He came in the next day, apologized and thanked me, then handed me $20. That was more rewarding than some big tips I've received in the past.

BEST WAY TO GET YOUR ATTENTION AT THE BAR: Make eye contact, maybe try a smile, and I promise I'll get to you. If you're loud, rude, impatient or waving a bill in my face, I'll be right with you… after I've taken care of everybody else at the bar.



DRINK OF CHOICE: Stranahan's Colorado whiskey with an Allagash Confluence back.

SIGNATURE COCKTAIL: 1 Duvel, 1 Duvel tulip, 1 perfect pour.

BY DAY: I run a consulting business called Beverage Influential that represents brands like Cabana Cachaça.

DESCRIBE YOUR STYLE: I like to keep it real. Walk up to any bar where I'm working—whether I'm throwing down caipirinhas at a Brazilian club night in Worcester, making a Vieux Carré back when I worked at Drink, or pouring banging Gaglioppo and serving dishes prepared by two of America's best chefs—it doesn't matter. My style is doing whatever I have to do to make people smile.

DESCRIBE WHERE YOU WORK: Coppa is a rustic, unassuming neighborhood spot. Think Frank Sinatra chased by some Beastie Boys and Mos Def. Dark wood and subway tile, and bright Aperol orange. You'll hear me say this more than once: Coppa is about more than the tangibles.

HOW WOULD YOUR REGULARS DESCRIBE YOU? "That red-headed guy." It's always the hair. Some people like to throw the word "ginger" around.

PERSONAL POLICY ON DATING CUSTOMERS: Life's short, so why not?

DRINK OF CHOICE: Caipirinha, Mai Tai, Bud Light Lime, Whiskey Smash, Jameson and ginger ale. It depends on the place, time and what I'm trying to get done.

SIGNATURE COCKTAIL:
ST. TRINITY SOUR

1 OZ. PIERRE FERRAND AMBRE COGNAC
1½ OZ. RHUM BARBANCOURT 8 YR
½ OZ. JOHN D. TAYLOR'S VELVET FALERNUM
½ OZ. ROASTED-STRAWBERRY SYRUP*
1 EGG WHITE
1 HEALTHY DASH ANGOSTURA OR AROMATIC BITTERS
1 BAR SPOON (⅛ OZ) VANILLA-BEAN-INFUSED VINEGAR*

Shake all ingredients without ice to emulsify. Add ice and shake hard. Double strain into a chilled coupe glass. Garnish with freshly cracked black pepper.

ROASTED-STRAWBERRY SYRUP
Clean and evenly chop 1 pint of strawberries. Lightly drizzle with extra-virgin olive oil and roast at 375 degrees for 9 minutes or until moderately colored. Simmer with 1 pint of water and one pint of demerara sugar. Puree, strain and chill.

VANILLA BEAN-INFUSED VINEGAR
Slice in half and scrape two vanilla beans. Add to 1 pint of white-wine vinegar. Let sit for at least 24 hours.

TRINA'S STARLITE LOUNGE, 3 BEACON ST., SOMERVILLE (617-576-0006) TRINASTARLITELOUNGE.COM; THU.-SAT.

BOTTLED AND DISTILLED IN: East Boston and Winthrop, Mass.

BARTENDING STYLE: Fun, fast and flirty.

DESCRIBE YOUR REGULARS: Everyone from Walter, the older guy who has been drinking here long before this bar was called Starlite, to the servers, chefs and bartenders I've admired for years. The amazing thing is that we have loyal regulars—and lots of them—after only six months of being open.

FAVORITE BAR FOR OFF NIGHTS: Highland Kitchen, Eastern Standard, the Druid and Deep Ellum.

LEAST FAVORITE DRINK TO MAKE: I know [it] sounds like a total cop-out, but I can muddle, squeeze and shake just about anything—as long as it's delicious and makes my customer happy.

BEST TIP EVER RECEIVED: I got a tip that [the] Beehive was looking for a bartender. Without working there, I'd have never met Josh Childs—a great friend and the reason that Starlite exists.

HANGOVER CURE: Shot of Fernet and lots of orange soda.

SIGNATURE COCKTAIL:
STARLITE COCKTAIL

2 OZ. BACARDI RUM
¾ OZ. PARFAIT AMOUR
¼ OZ. LEMON JUICE

Shake and strain into a chilled cocktail glass, and top with bubbles. Garnish with orange peel.

DESCRIBE WHERE YOU WORK: A little something for everyone; it can be a neighborhood hangout but also a special-occasion place.

MOST INTERESTING OR ODD PATRON ENCOUNTER: Burgess Meredith ordering a Manhattan in the voice of his character, the Penguin from Batman.

LEAST FAVORITE DRINK TO MAKE: Cosmopolitan, or anything made with Malibu.

WORST TRICK YOU EVER PLAYED ON A PATRON: This was on a coworker, but the patrons helped. A colleague was having a terrible day, so I stuck a sign on her back saying, "Ask me about my day!" So everyone asked her, and she eventually started crying.

BEST TIP YOU EVER RECEIVED: Someone told me, "When working a bar in Boston, don't talk about politics or religion."

HANGOVER CURE: Lots of liquids, a big juicy burger with bacon and cheese, and a shot of Fernet.

SIGNATURE COCKTAIL:

THE HAVANA

½ OZ.	COINTREAU
¼ OZ.	OJ
¼ OZ.	SIMPLE SYRUP
¼ OZ.	LIME JUICE
2 DASHES	ORANGE BITTERS

Pour all ingredients into a shaker, add ice, shake well, strain into a rocks glass and garnish with a flamed orange disc (squeeze orange disc over glass while lighting with a match).

HUNGRY MOTHER, 233 CARDINAL MEDEIROS AVE., CAMBRIDGE (617-499-0090) HUNGRYMOTHERCAMBRIDGE.COM; TUE, FRI. AND SAT. NIGHT

BOTTLED AND DISTILLED IN: Concord, Mass.; raised in Acton.

BY DAY: I'm a student at MassArt in the industrial design program.

WHY DO PATRONS RETURN TO YOUR BAR AGAIN AND AGAIN? Variation with consistency. I know that sounds like an oxymoron, but we consistently use superlative ingredients and offer great value. However, the menu changes weekly, and we have returning guests who've never had the same drink twice.

YOUR TRADEMARK: A bow tie on weekends.

LEAST FAVORITE DRINK TO MAKE: Mojitos in January.

FAVORITE BAR TRICK OR JOKE: A woman walks into a bar and asks for a double entendre. So the bartender gives it to her.

HANGOVER CURE: Alka-Seltzer, go back to bed for an hour, then a tangerine Emergen-C.

SIGNATURE COCKTAIL:

JERSEY MAIDEN

2 OZ.	APPLEJACK
½ OZ.	BECHEROVKA
1 OZ.	SORGHUM SYRUP (2 PARTS WATER, 1 PART SORGHUM)
1	WHOLE EGG

Shake in a cocktail shaker without ice for 5 seconds, until the egg mixes with the other ingredients. Add ice. Shake 15–20 seconds, until frothy. Strain into an old-fashioned glass. Top with 3 or 4 strokes of freshly grated nutmeg. ✖✖✖

Happy Hour

WHAT ALES YOU

THE BEST PART OF A meal often comes in a glass. To prove it, the drink enthusiasts at Cambridge Common are hosting a Pretty Things Beer & Ale Project dinner on May 4. The evening celebrates the local craft brewing company by pairing dishes like grilled pork chop with Saint Botolph's Town and mussels with Fluffy White Rabbits Belgian Triple. There's even spinach salad matched with an English mild recreated from a 19th-century recipe. Trump that, wine tastings. ERIN WIEGERT

The dinner is on May 4 at 6:30 pm. $50. Cambridge Common 1667 Mass Ave. Cambridge (617-547-1228) cambridgecommonrestaurant.com

Knock 'Em Dead

Monster Mash The team that created the hit musical The Producers reanimates another dusty Mel Brooks comedy with Young Frankenstein. Mary Shelley's monster story gets the song and dance treatment, along with a busty assistant named Inga and a jolt of Brooks' trademark slapstick. The show comes alive through May 2 at the Boston Opera House.

Ajami ★★ ½ One of this year's Oscar nominees for best foreign language film, this collaboration between Palestinian Scandar Copti and Israeli Yaron Shani is a nerve-jangling crime drama chronicling the ways sectarian strife creeps into everything, including the underworld. As a collection of crossed wires and doomed good intentions set in the Tel Aviv suburb of Yaffa, the movie makes it clear that surviving in this neighborhood is hard enough without also having to take part in a Holy War. Ajami is broken into six overlapping chapters, each following a different protagonist on a slightly skewed timeline. But the more that's revealed, the more Copti and Shani's puzzle starts to seem gimmicky and cheap. There's a vivid sense of place, and it's impossible not to feel for these young characters, but a more straightforward telling may have granted Ajami the noble inevitability of tragedy. As is, it's merely clever. (At West Newton.)

Alice In Wonderland ★ ½ It's hard to remember now, but there was a time when Tim Burton was an original, exciting filmmaker and not just a brand name. These days, you know his formula. Burton takes an existing property and gussies it up with kooky production design and overindulgent performances from his wife, Helena Bonham Carter, and his other wife, Johnny Depp. The extravagant failure of Alice in Wonderland feels like nothing more than a once-great director beating his head against the brick wall of an artistic dead end. Not an adaptation of Lewis Carroll's book but a sequel, Linda Woolverton's screenplay finds a 19-year-old Alice returning to a Wonderland she barely recalls visiting. If this sounds familiar, that's because Steven Spielberg used the same faulty scenario for his awful Peter Pan flick, Hook. This bizarre rip-off of one of history's biggest bombs is a joyless, empty film. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Avatar ★ ½ Twelve years and some $400 million later, James Cameron's latest opus lands with a thud. Sure, you can admire the 3-D presentation, performance-capture technique and computer animation. (If you're not already impressed enough, characters keep elbowing you in the ribs, a reminder that you're watching something amazing.) This is groundbreaking, next-level technology, and I was bored out of my damn mind. Looking like a tacky airbrush painting, Avatar is CGI eye candy by way of prog-rock album covers with an absence of characterization and an abundance of corny dialogue. Unabashedly ripping off Terrence Malick's The New World, Kevin Costner's Dances With Wolves and his own Aliens, Cameron sends Sam Worthington's crippled space marine to a distant planet to reenact a banal white-guy-saves-the-natives fantasy. It feels recycled, rehashed and more like an F/X demo reel than an actual movie. (At New England Aquarium and in the suburbs.)

The Bounty Hunter ★ Do you think Jennifer Aniston and Gerard Butler even bother to watch their films? What is it with these two? If I see either one on a movie poster, I know I'm in for a night of crap. In this desultory, abysmally directed action-comedy, Butler stars as a drunken skiptracer charged with dragging his embittered ex-wife (Aniston) to jail. She's a tough-talking reporter (sure, she is) investigating a suicide that may have been a murder. Think they'll uncover the truth? Wonder if they'll get back together? Boasting production values unfit for late-night cable flicks, the movie looks washed-out and cheap. Butler is loutish and unappealing, while Aniston remains improbably tanned and glammed. No effort whatsoever was expended in the making of this movie. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Clash of the Titans ★ ½ The original 1981 Clash of the Titans might've been a silly, turgid film, but at least it had an endearing campiness. The remake is all business, as one scene even trashes the previous picture's robot owl sidekick as a symbolic gesture. Sam Worthington, who also starred in Terminator: Salvation and Avatar without displaying a single personality trait, plays Perseus, the demigod illegitimate son of Zeus who takes on the heavens in a holy war. Worthington faces some arbitrary tasks, whose random rules are explained by other characters just seconds before the battle begins. Things drone on like a video game, with Perseus defeating one generic monster after another, and then starting over from scratch in the very

LIKING IT ROUGH

This spin on the superhero story pulls no punches.

Kick-Ass ★★★
Starring Aaron Johnson, Chloe Grace Moretz, Christopher Mintz-Plasse, Mark Strong and Nicolas Cage. Based on the comic book by Mark Millar. Screenplay by Matthew Vaughn and Jane Goldman. Directed by Matthew Vaughn. At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.

AS THE SUPERHERO MOVIE for people who are sick of superhero movies, Matthew Vaughn's Kick-Ass is a rude blast of attitude and giddy, remorseless violence. The film is so juvenile, pandering and depraved that critics like Roger Ebert and AO Scott have been exceeding their word counts to wag their fingers and trumpet its release as some sort of toxic event that should make us all consider just how far movies have gone.

I'm usually eager to feel morally outraged, but Kick-Ass strikes me as entirely too silly to be cause for alarm. It's just a hell of a lot of fun, giving a well-deserved wedgie to Hollywood's recent glut of solemn, costumed avengers.

Aaron Johnson plays the title character, a dorky teenage fanboy named Dave Lizewski who wastes his days reading comics and conjuring elaborate sexual fantasies about his English teacher. Dave finally gets fed up with the world's injustices, and he takes to the streets wearing a green-and-yellow scuba suit, calling himself Kick-Ass and attempting to fight crime. Initially, this doesn't work out so well.

But thanks to YouTube, Kick-Ass becomes a viral video phenomenon. Unfortunately for Dave, this means he's attracted the attention of a Mafia boss (Mark Strong) who's been losing henchmen at an alarming rate to costumed superheroes. It seems that Kick-Ass isn't alone out there, and lurking in the shadows are Big Daddy (Nicolas Cage) and Hit-Girl (Chloe Grace Moretz)—a brutally efficient father-daughter team of bloodthirsty vigilantes. He walks around in a Batman costume; she's 11 years old.

> Vaughn has a grand time tweaking tropes of the superhero genre.

The instantly iconic Hit-Girl is spawning all the fuming op-ed pieces, but personally I'm more worried about how many hipster Halloween costumes she'll be responsible for this October. Sorry if this makes me insensitive, but watching a chipper little tyke in a purple wig drop the c-word while decapitating everyone in sight made me giggle like a fool. Moretz, whom you might remember as that irritating, wise-beyond-her-years little sister in (500) Days of Summer, strikes such the right note of cheerful exuberance as she's slaughtering goons, her character becomes more incongruously endearing as the body-count skyrockets.

She's assisted by another deliriously crackpot performance from Cage. Something about Werner Herzog's Bad Lieutenant reboot seems to have awakened the actor's daredevil instincts, and his effusive, doting-dad routine is almost as great as the stilted, Adam West–accent he affects whenever wearing his silly costume.

Based on the comic by Mark Millar, who penned the similarly indefensible Wanted, Kick-Ass inflates nerd wish-fulfillment fantasies to ecstatic heights. After all, it's only after revealing his secret identity that Dave gets to sleep with the hottest girl in school. (Before that, she just assumed he was gay.) Even though I haven't read the source material, looking at Kick-Ass and Wanted's lessons of better living through aggression, one can probably assume that Millar is one of those guys who was profoundly affected by Fight Club without ever grasping that it's a satire.

Director Vaughn blithely ignores the material's deeper implications and just has a grand time tweaking tropes of the superhero genre. Dave's squeaky, woe-is-me narration makes wicked mockery of Tobey Maguire's Spider-Man, and even Hans Zimmer's repetitive Dark Knight score earns a sly bit of ridicule. Shot through a digitally amped-up color palette by cinematographer Ben Davis, the movie's vibrant artifice goes a long way toward making the constant mayhem feel harmless.

There's also another great turn from Christopher Mintz-Plasse as the mob boss' lonely son, aspiring to a career of super-villainy. Striking up a friendship with Kick-Ass via MySpace (which I believe makes the movie a period-piece set in 2007) this endearingly lispy young actor once again made me laugh simply by walking into a room. Who would've predicted that out of Superbad's three horny teens, McLovin is the only one whose act wouldn't go stale?

At almost two hours, Kick-Ass feels a bit windy. But the over-the-top finale is so boisterous, kinetic and just plain wrong that it's impossible not to applaud. I laughed. God help me, I laughed. ✖✖✖

Caught on Tape

Leave it to the Coolidge to resurrect cinematic crap and make it enjoyable again. The Found Footage Festival: Bad Movie Night series screens films discovered at garage sales and thrift stores for your cringe-worthy pleasure. On May 1, see Computer Beach Party, a 1980s VHS about two men who capitalize on their tech-savvy ways to save their beloved slice of shore.

next scene. This new Clash is so flat and by the numbers, it actually made me long for that annoying robot owl. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Crazy Heart ★★ ½ In his best performance since The Big Lebowski, Jeff Bridges stars as a washed-up, alcoholic country singer touring lousy Southwestern dive bars. Scott Cooper's debut feature initially boasts a grungy authenticity, but just when you think Crazy Heart is on its way to being The Wrestler of country music, a banal redemption formula kicks in and sends the whole film reeling off into inspirational-TV-movie land. The too-young Maggie Gyllenhaal proves an improbable love interest for Bridges' seedy troubadour, and (an excellent) Colin Farrell drops by as a former protégé who makes success look far too easy. The grim, admirable desolation of the film's early passages is quickly abandoned for garden-variety uplift and clichéd rehab scenes. The late-game addition of Robert Duvall as a curmudgeonly AA aficionado only adds to the phoniness. These brave performances deserved better. (At West Newton and in the suburbs.)

Date Night ★★ As the writing in TV comedies grows more sophisticated and edgy, its big-screen competition keeps sliding backward. Proof of this sad fact, director Shawn Levy's latest strands Steve Carell and Tina Fey, two of TV's smartest, funniest performers/writers, in a tedious slog that feels so much like one of those 1980s Touchstone Pictures remakes of French farces, it probably should've starred Steve Guttenberg and Shelley Long. Playing a boring New Jersey couple who steal a reservation at a trendy Manhattan eatery, Carell and Fey end up involved in a convoluted mistaken-identity scenario that leaves them on the run from crooked cops and Ray Liotta's spaghetti-slurping Mafioso. The two stars ad-lib as hard as they can, assisted by a sly, self-mocking supporting turn from Mark Wahlberg. But there's no escaping the fundamental lameness of Josh Klausner's screenplay, and Levy seems to think we've come to a Carell and Fey vehicle for the car chases. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Ghost Writer ★★★ ½ It's not my job to weigh in on Roman Polanski's personal issues. Sure, I'd never let him within a mile of my underage cousins, but The Ghost Writer is such a superlative example of craftsmanship that I walked out of the theater on a cloud. Adapted from Robert Harris' novel, this is a humdrum potboiler polished to a very fine sheen. Ewan McGregor gives his least-offensive performance in years as a hack writer assigned to wrestle the unwieldy memoirs of a transparent Tony Blair stand-in (strikingly well-played by Pierce Brosnan) into something publishable. What matters isn't the plot but the air of malevolence that Polanski brings to every seemingly innocuous conversation. He creates suspense without cutting, positioning the camera slightly off-axis for long takes that induce a sense of overwhelming dread. There's a casual elegance to these compositions, and Polanski displays an old-school command of the medium. Not a great story, but they just don't make 'em like this anymore. (At Kendall Square, Waltham Embassy and in the suburbs.)

Green Zone ★★ Director Paul Greengrass alternates between harrowing docudramas like Bloody Sunday or United 93 and the whip-smart, blockbuster satisfactions of his Jason Bourne sequels. Teaming with his muse, Matt Damon, Greengrass attempts to merge the two forms with this propulsive action-adventure loosely based on Rajiv Chandrasekaran's nonfiction best seller, Imperial Life in the Emerald City. Set in Baghdad during the summer of 2003, Green Zone stars Damon as a no-nonsense grunt who's shocked to discover that there are no weapons of mass destruction. The problem here is that Greengrass' two skill-sets cancel each other out, as his knack for packing the jittery frames with verisimilitude is drowned out by the dopey demands of Brian Helgeland's crowd-pleasing screenplay. The quagmire in Iraq is too complex a scenario to serve as backdrop for composite villains and pat resolutions. Damon is terrific, as always, and Greengrass crafts some suspenseful set-pieces, but the fictional happy ending is an insult. (In the suburbs.)

Greenberg ★★★ ½ That person you wanted to be in your 20s is embarrassing at age 40. Writer-director Noah Baumbach, who helmed such cringe-fests as The Squid and the Whale and Margot at the Wedding, hits squirm-overdrive with this tale of a maladjusted rebel house-sitting in L.A. while his brother's family tours Vietnam. Adrift in poolside ennui, Ben Stiller's Roger Greenberg seethes and insults according to ancient reflexes, alienating those around him for maximum discomfort. He doesn't understand adult notions of compromise and turns all his interior self-loathing and disappointment outward against the world. His character is unbearable, but the attitude comes from someplace genuinely painful. Only his brother's hapless 20-something assistant, played brilliantly by the bewitching Greta Gerwig, can break through Greenberg's armor of sarcastic aggression. She's too good for him, but you'll root for them to get together all the same. (At Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square, Waltham Embassy and in the suburbs.)

How to Train Your Dragon ★★★ This is an unusually adorable CGI adventure from DreamWorks Animation, best known for the noxious Shrek series. Jay Baruchel voices a stumblebum Viking named Hiccup who aches to befriend dragons instead of slay them. Much to the chagrin of his Hagar the Horrible–looking dad (Gerard Butler, in his first tolerable movie), our young hero spends the bulk of the film cozying up to a moody creature nicknamed Toothless and teaching kids a valuable lesson about kindness conquering aggression. The story is a familiar one, with echoes of Avatar during the vertiginous 3-D flying sequences. But the movie is disarmingly sweet and strikingly well-crafted. Directors Dean DeBlois and Chris Sanders were responsible for Disney's charming 2002 oddity Lilo & Stitch. This one doesn't feel quite as fresh, but it gets the job done with rousing action sequences and a great orchestral score by John Powell. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

It's Complicated ★★★ There's such a lightness to Meryl Streep's work these days—even in something as wretched as Mamma Mia!—that she seems to be having the time of her life. Same goes for Alec Baldwin, whose middle-aged paunch has unleashed his inner comedian. Writer/director Nancy Meyers honestly doesn't have to do much besides put these dynamos together and let them riff. Playing a couple that's been divorced for a decade, Streep and Baldwin drunkenly hook up the night before their son's college graduation and spend the rest of the movie negotiating the horny aftershocks. Baldwin's remarried to a bitchy younger woman (Lake Bell, harshly photographed to give Streep the advantage) while Meryl finds herself in a tentative courtship with Steve Martin's sensitive architect. Like most Meyers movies, this one wallows uncomfortably in ostentatious displays of wealth. But there's no denying the giddy chemistry between Streep and Baldwin. They're both having so much fun it's contagious. (In the suburbs.)

A Prophet ★★★ ½ A best foreign-language film Oscar nominee, Jacques Audiard's entertaining gangster epic is a story about pluck and ingenuity working in all the wrong ways. Tahar Rahim stars as Malik El Djebena, a helpless young man who enters jail as an illiterate thug, only to blossom into a modern-day Michael Corleone over the span of six years. Savagely beaten on his arrival and bullied into a murder by a ruthless gang of elderly Corsicans, El Djebena quietly assimilates to prison life and works every setback to his own Machiavellian advantage. Audiard slyly comments on France's changing racial landscape, as the old-school Corsicans ruling the roost gradually find themselves outnumbered by their Arab counterparts. The diminishment of entrenched power opens up a world of opportunity for the ever-alert protagonist, and Rahim's remarkable performance expands as his character's confidence grows. El Djebena manipulates gangs and plots against one another in a cunning chess match, with amoral, crowd-pleasing results. (At Coolidge Corner.)

The Runaways ★★ ½ Dakota Fanning is all grown up. In case you had any doubt, director Floria Sigismondi's cheerfully trashy biopic about the 1970s girl group begins with a shot of Fanning's menstrual blood hitting the pavement on the Sunset Strip. Charting the rise and fall of these queens of noise by studiously embracing every stale cliché from every rock 'n' roll movie ever made, The Runaways is more of a kick than it has a right to be. There's an agreeable, lurid energy, as Sigismondi fully embraces the female empowerment/leering-at-jailbait contradictions that made the band such a sensation… at least in Japan. Fanning vamps it up as Cherie Currie, the original riot grrl who couldn't handle the drugs and adulation. Michael Shannon steals scenes as abusive manager Kim Fowley. But the movie belongs to Kristen Stewart's Joan Jett. Nailing Jett's hunched strut and snarled delivery, Stewart adds a layer of vulnerability. Add an extra star if you enjoy seeing teenage girls in their underwear. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner and Waltham Embassy.)

Shutter Island ★★★ ½ Martin Scorsese's latest is a work of malevolent ambience that works in spite of the occasionally lame story it's trying to tell. This is a Technicolor phantasmagoria seen almost exclusively through the point of view of its tormented, guilt-ridden antihero. Leonardo DiCaprio's federal marshal Teddy Daniels arrives on a hyperbolically forbidding island in Boston Harbor to investigate the abrupt disappearance of a mental patient at a hospital where rumors of mind-control experiments run rampant. It's an exercise in style, with a brilliant filmmaker flexing his muscles on inferior material. Scorsese telegraphs "the twist" in the opening moments, asking the audience to see the film as something scarier and more substantial than the simple narrative trick pulled in Dennis Lehane's novel. The earlier you figure out the "surprise" ending, the more rewarding the movie becomes as a portrait of denial and self-hatred. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Music { PAUL ROBICHEAU }

NO ALIBIS

Shelby Lynne charts her independent course with country-wide support.

Shelby Lynne plays Johnny D's Uptown on May 8.

SHELBY LYNNE PREFERS hanging with her two dogs and gardening at home in the California desert to running on the music-industry treadmill. So when her bassist shared that his ex-girlfriend dubbed him a "loser dreamer," Lynne saw herself in a similar spot. She also had the seed to break a songwriting dry spell.

"Most of my friends who are musicians, I think we're all 'loser dreamers,' and it's a wonderful thing," the torchy roots-pop singer says from her home outside Palm Springs. "Without the dreamers, it would be pretty boring."

"Loser Dreamer" became a centerpiece of Tears, Lies and Alibis, Lynne's new self-produced debut for her own label. It explores the familiar territory of rocky relationships as well as such offbeat topics as Airstream trailers and rare desert rain.

Lynne made the CD in her home studio and in Nashville with a dozen musicians, from bassist/engineer Brian Harrison (who inspired "Loser Dreamer") to keyboardist Spooner Oldham of Muscle Shoals fame. Yet the results are relaxed and largely acoustic, framing her sweet, distinctive voice with an earthy directness.

"It started out with just me and a guitar, and at that point, you think, what could I possibly do to improve it?" she says. "The whole thing about producing records is knowing when to quit."

The 41-year-old singer has dealt with plenty of record labels, producers and collaborators. She's been a winner more than a loser, even if the results haven't translated into CD sales.

Barely out of her teens, Lynne launched a commercial country career with a 1988 George Jones duet and even won the Academy of Country Music's top new female vocalist award in 1991. But she grew "tired of that thing" and detoured into Western swing by the mid-'90s.

"The whole thing about producing records is knowing when to quit."

Then came the odd breakthrough: She won the 2001 Grammy Award for best new artist behind her sweeping soul-pop statement I Am Shelby Lynne, produced and cowritten by Bill Bottrell, who hatched Sheryl Crow's Tuesday Night Music Club.

Producer Glen Ballard's glossier style hurt her follow-up Love, Shelby, which prompted Lynne to strip back her sound for two mid-decade CDs. But old-school producer Phil Ramone brought the right touch to her 2008 Dusty Springfield tribute Just a Little Lovin' (her friend Barry Manilow provided the idea for the project).

"I've always liked being a sponge, in whatever capacity," says the Alabama-bred singer, who also tried acting, from a role playing Johnny Cash's mother in Walk the Line to television cameos. "If you listen to yourself all the time, you become too insular."

Closer to home, Boston rock-legend Peter Wolf tapped Lynne as his duet foil for "Tragedy," the lead track from his new album Midnight Souvenirs. Lynne jumped at the invite, became a good friend and predicts a Wolf cameo when she plays Johnny D's on May 8 with bassist Harrison and guitarist John Jackson. "I've always thought Peter was one of the great frontmen of rock 'n' roll," she says. "He's got a badass energy, and he's so generous."

The notoriously feisty Lynne certainly relates to badass energy. "I'm proud of the decisions I've made—20 years and sitting here and being able to make a living," she says. "I'm still here without any hit records.... This is what I do."

She resolved to start her own label, Everso Records, when her last outlet, Lost Highway, passed on Tears, Lies and Alibis. "I said, 'OK, well, I certainly don't want to be here if you don't want me," she says. "I'm gonna do my own thing."

Lynne, whose sister Allison Moorer is a noted country singer, recalls a recent conversation with their grandmother. "I was talking about being in my 40s now—she's 84—and I said, 'Nanny, I feel great. And I'm healthier than I've ever been.' She said, 'Darlin', in your 40s, you're going to make the best records you've ever made.' So I'm looking forward to it." ***

Dan of the Hour

Local Talent

Talk about an endorsement: Danny Gallagher has performed with the Dropkick Murphys as a guest vocalist, in addition to national recording artists like Susan Tedeschi. More recently, he was invited to sing the national anthem at Fenway—for the second time. But don't wait until July to catch his acoustic act. Following the Red Sox game on May 7, Gallagher plays the Bleacher Bar. It's a sure winner.

THE RAY TYE MEDICAL AID FOUNDATION
WE WILL NEVER STOP CARING

A LETTER FROM RWANDA

You have a nice welcome note when someone searches for your Foundation. It says

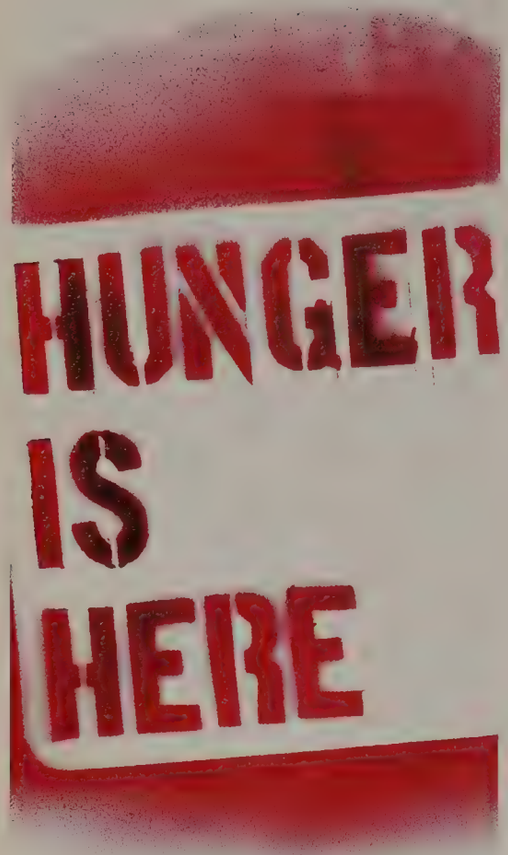
WE NEVER STOP CARING! WHEN YOU SAVE A LIFE YOU SAVE THE FUTURE.

Allow me to congratulate for this mission because you put it in practice, you do not only say it. Today, my objective is to thank you so much for paying my heart surgery.

Mr Tye with Erneste

I would like to be a doctor when I grow up and help other as you helped me. I wish to be a cardiologist, and I will like to come back to the United States for my college education.

I thank you once again for helping me and my God already blessed you.



Thanks.
Erneste.

Dear Erneste,
Thank you for your beautiful note.
YOU ARE THE FUTURE.
I hope that as you grow up you realize that helping someone else is the greatest mission you can have.
God bless you,
Ray Tye

Michelle Volz stopped at the Sangam Girl Scout World Centre in Pune, India, where she found both enlightenment and a delicious box of Thin Mints.

Coco and Gale Minot visited Cartagena, Colombia. Despite its magnificent colonial fortifications and beautiful Caribbean beaches, the city is mostly famed for its exquisite background shrubbery.

Louisiana senator David Vitter was surprised to learn our magazine was complimentary. Usually, he has to pay for such quality entertainment.

THE LANE EVENT

Bowled Over

Who could pass up the opportunity to watch the city's top socialites trade in their Louboutins for two-toned rented shoes and risk their flawless manicures for charity? That's only part of the appeal of Bowl-A-Rama, the fund-raiser for Kids Can Cook, held at King's.

It's also a chance to hang out with the very likable likes of Back Bay party pair Jeryl and Steve Oristaglio, mega-philanthropists Susan and Bill Poduska, South End doyenne Jane Miller, the puckish Parker Treacy, sexy Mexican Javier Cortez, fashionista Liana Peterson and her man, Michael Krupp, and so on and so forth.

Besides bowling, there was a ring toss where the prizes were bottles of wine, which prompted the following exchange:

"I'm trying for the Champagne," to which the person's other half said, "Umm, OK. But why don't we just to go to the liquor store and buy a bottle?"

Carny Folk

Imagine a carnival with all the usual stuff—relentless organ music, clowns on stilts, assorted games involving impossible odds—along with celebrity chefs like Lydia Shire making lobster rolls, an open bar every few feet and novelties like cotton candy sprayed with rum.

That's our kinda fair, and those were just a few of the delightful surprises at Room to Dream's Carnival of Dreams, which was held at the Cyclorama and attracted the highly attractive likes of party pair Elizabeth Krupp and Mike Fish, the oh-so-social Cokie and Lee Perry, PR powerhouses Kate Shamon, Wendy Pierce and Marlo Fogelman, the irresistible Crystyna Kassaraba, and one woman who surveyed the room and said, "It seems like a very nice crowd, judging by their shoes."

Tyin' On the Feedbag

What a difference one little vowel can make.

Life Saver? A round candy with a hole in the middle.

LifeSavor? An elaborate evening that starts with a cocktail party at the Langham Hotel, followed by lavish dinner parties at the best restaurants all over town.

As always, Community Servings' annual gala attracted the glitziest of the glitterati, including Mother Superior Joan Parker, the ever-affable Don Sturdy, criminally blue-eyed Rob Gravis, studly snack-food mogul Mark Andrus with the stunning Brelyn Spindel, blonde bombshell Emily Mareb, investment whiz kids Paul and Wes Karger, both David Browns—the TV reporter and the banker—interior-design avatar Eileen Patterson, attorney-at-large Jack Zalkind and more.

My favorite work at MassArt's preview party

International Cheese and Crackers

Michael Grohall and TT Baum at MassArt's preview party

Referring to the charm around his neck, one guest said, "It wards off evil spirits," to which a friend replied, "So how are you holding that martini?"

However, the award for most ridiculous remark came from the person who said, "I've gained 10 pounds, and I can't afford a new wardrobe. It's cheaper just to vomit."

Passports, Please

As the good book says, ask and ye shall receive.

Upon arriving at the preview party for MassArt's annual auction, yours truly went on a seemingly biblical search for what seemed like 40 days and 40 nights to find a men's room.

"They should use the money from this auction to add more bathrooms," I said snidely, only to learn that's precisely what they intend to do: improve the facilities in general. (My bid for a Pulitzer Prize in investigative journalism: Uncovering the uncanny fact that both the school's president and the company that makes the urinals in the men's rooms are named Sloan, but it's pure coincidence.)

Meanwhile, back in the gallery, guests had the chance to peruse the work of such world-renowned artists as Tara Donovan, Shepard Fairey and William Wegman, as well as rub elbows with photographer extraordinaire Steve Edson, the spectacular Chrissy Kazis, the aforementioned Karger brothers, Brazilian bombshell Salwa Smith, jeweler-to-the-stars Dana Kraus, newlyweds TT Baum and Michael Grohall, and countless other artists, collectors and connoisseurs.

However, my personal favorite piece of art wasn't even in the auction: On the hors d'oeuvre table, next to a large tray, was a sign that read: "International Cheese and Crackers," which prompted someone to say, "Good. I can't stand the domestic kind." ×××

Runs Like a Girl

As a kid, I took the Presidential Fitness Challenge as seriously as any academic test, which is to say very seriously. My performance in gym class probably saved me from social Siberia. That, and Esprit clothing. I don't mean to brag, but the V-sit reach and pull-ups were like the times tables: easy peasy. I even insisted on doing the one-mile run with the boys and practiced during recess (which sounds slightly nerdy looking back). Poor Aldo Panizo. Never could beat me, buddy.

So I loved learning that Ayla Brown played football in middle school. Brown—known for her father, American Idol stint and impressive basketball stats (in that order)—has come a long way since Pop Warner. Most recently, she scored a reporting gig on CBS. It seems fitting that she appears in this issue with soccer star Leslie Osborne, who models in her spare time. "It's really fun to be aggressive on the field and then step off and be a girlie girl," Osborne says. My thoughts exactly.

FRITES & GREET

KNOW ONE THING, but know it well. It's the philosophy of Saús, a Belgian "street food" cafe opening this month on Union Street. Apart from a nod to waffles, the menu consists entirely of house-made dips and pommes frites. "They're twice fried," says cofounder Tanya Kropinicki, 25, of the difference between frites and chips. On "duck-fat days," customers can opt for frites cooked with traditional grease. When asked about opening a restaurant in these trying times, Kropinicki laughs. "The universe forced us. We got laid off at the same time." ANDREW RIMAS

Going Out

Rethinking Kendall

They aim to invoke the spirit of Einstein with his tongue sticking out. In fact, that's the image Vincent Conte almost had woven into Think Tank's welcome mat.

While Kendall Square offers plenty of places to loosen your tie, Conte, and co-owners Jay Leo and Mitchell Muroff, hope to attract a second wave of customers when the afterwork crowd disperses—to a space Conte describes as what would happen if "a 1970s teen remodeled their grandma's basement." Nostalgia is key as the team looks to create a live-music scene like the old Kendall Cafe and a vibe that's "a reincarnation of Lava Bar."

But the idea Conte clings to is transition. For the happy hours, there's Sriracha wings ($8–$10, apps), a jukebox and the 8-bit escape of Donkey Kong. As the night progresses, there are more options from the global-influenced comfort menu, including a bulgogi burger and black-sesame cod ($9–$12, sandwiches; $18–$27, entrées). "The key is the 25- to 40-year-olds [who work upstairs] all day long, but you can only push them to maybe 10 o'clock," Conte says. "We can flip a switch at 10 and create a whole different world."

With the banquettes in one dining room removed, the nearly 200-seat restaurant can play host to songwriter showcases and resident DJs. There are tentative plans for summer concerts in the plaza. Beginning this month, Kendall may no longer be the stop you skip on your Red Line trip to someplace better.

Good Eats

Eat Your Broccoli

Any cook worth his fleur de sel can make a broccoli bisque with gobs of cream and rich stock. But it takes a particularly savvy chef like Chris Parsons to coax full-fat flavor from milk and veggies. His secrets to creamless creamy soup? For starters, a turbocharged blender and a fine-mesh sieve. Otherwise, it's just a little kitchen know-how: a potato (for body), a liberal hand with the seasonings and the good sense not to overcook the broccoli.

ELIZABETH BOMZE

BROCCOLI SOUP

- Extra-virgin olive oil, as needed
- 1 Spanish onion, peeled and roughly chopped
- Kosher salt
- 2 lbs. broccoli, florets removed and cut into bite-size pieces, and stems thinly sliced
- 1 russet potato, peeled and thinly sliced
- 6 cups whole milk
- White pepper

Heat oil in large saucepan over medium heat. Add the onion, season liberally with salt and stir. Reduce heat to medium-low and cover. Cook for 10 minutes, stirring occasionally.

Add the sliced broccoli stems to the onion, stir, cover, reduce heat to low and cook for 10 minutes, stirring occasionally.

Meanwhile, bring four quarts of water to a boil with one cup of kosher salt. Prepare an ice bath. Plunge the broccoli florets into the boiling water and cook for 1 minute then remove to the ice bath. Spin the florets in a salad spinner and set aside.

Heat the milk in a medium saucepan, add the potato and bring to a simmer. Pour into the pot with the broccoli stems and onion. Bring to a gentle simmer and cook until the potatoes are tender (about 10 minutes). Remove from heat and add blanched florets to the pot.

Blend in a high-speed blender and strain, pushing solids against mesh with back of a ladle. Season with kosher salt and white pepper.

Prepare the ice bath.

Drink of the Moment

BACH ON TRACK

Six months ago, Stoddard's promised a cocktail menu 55-drinks long. Now the venue has finally opened its doors, but with a trimmed list of thoughtfully picked classics. Options will grow as the weeks go by and the staff gets up to speed, but for the moment, "it's better to underpromise and overperform," explains Andy Kilgore, the principal bartender.

Sorry. They had delays. The city was thirsty. Now everyone needs a drink.

And springtime is the perfect time for a SEELBACH ($9). Created at Louisville's Seelbach Hotel around 1917, this is the cocktail of Gatsby lawn parties, the drink for proper derby-goers eschewing the plebian mint julep. "There are only a few great Champagne cocktails. And if it's not the best, it's certainly my favorite," Kilgore says.

Made with bourbon, a touch of Cointreau, healthy doses of both Angostura and Peychaud's bitters, and a Champagne top, the Seelbach is an exercise in equilibrium. "You want to find that balance," Kilgore says. "The sweetness of the bourbon, the bite of the bitters, and the Champagne holds its character as well." It's a cocktail that excites the tastebuds then lingers toward a slow, deliberate finish.

Making it the perfect drink for springtime, and for Stoddard's. Sorry.

TO THE CRAZED BITCH WHO CAME BANGING ON OUR DOOR ON SUNDAY, FEB. 7, AT 5:57 PM (WHEN WE CLOSE AT 6 PM): I was terminated thanks to your ridiculous complaint and childish, snobby behavior. It wouldn't have killed you to simply come back on Monday, Tuesday or any other day (as you claim to "live in the Pru neighborhood"). And I'm sure it wasn't critical to shop here for those few minutes. I hope your future is filled with misery! I wish you nothing but the worst, and if there is a higher power up there and any type of karma, your day will come! Rot in hell!

Dearest navy suit,

It was a much-needed Friday evening on the town with my ladies. You may have been in the same boat with your boys. Our eyes managed to skirt each others', and our sly smiles exchanged quick bursts. Soon the evening had quickly passed us by. Your suit jacket left its spot on the back of your chair and returned to your shoulders. Just a quick note to say I adore [how] you turned back to wave farewell. I just secretly wish you had said hello.

To the T bus driver:

You found a just-filled month's worth of prescription medicine (with syringes that must be kept refrigerated, mind you) that I left in my seat and called the pharmacy on the label to find me. The pharmacy called me and gave me your name and phone number. You then took the T to meet me at my closest stop to give me my medicine! You went the extra marathon! Thank you! You are awesome!

It wasn't the first fro-yo shop to hit the Hub, but Red Mango—at the corner of Huntington and Mass. avenues—already has a following. No surprise, there. The Korean chain is known for its tart, creamy soft-serve (stick with original, plus a scoop of fresh fruit). Natick Collection shoppers, stay tuned for a second outpost. ELIZABETH BOMZE

THE BEST WAY TO BREAK IT IS BY changing what you're doing. With lifting weights, you change the volume and duration. How much you are lifting, the amount of time it is taking. Cardio is the same thing. A lot of people get stuck in the rut of doing long, slow conditioning. Instead of going out for a 30-minute jog, do a 30-minute swim. If you're a runner, you run. So change it. Muscle confusion is really getting out of your comfort zone, and that's how we target working with athletes. We constantly change up the order of exercises. They don't get bored; they don't get stale; and they're constantly improving. ERIN WIEGERT

For Your Consideration

I really like carménère, but it's not an easy grape to get right. It needs a ridiculously long growing season with virtually no rain, abundant sunshine during the day and chilly nights. Otherwise, it tastes like a weird mix of prune juice and V-8. In short, absent the unique conditions of Chile's valleys, the grape is a bust. So why do I find carménère potentially more exciting than malbec, its successful South American counterpart? The distinctive flavor profile and texture: ripe red berries, chocolate, spice and irresistible velvet. It calls out for food, the tannins are soft, the taste lingering. If you've had a bad encounter, don't give up. Here are my reigning favorites in their price categories.

Casillero del Diablo Carménère Reserve

RAPEL VALLEY, 2008 ($11, Blanchard's, Jamaica Plain). This winery is one of the world's unsung gems, at least for the price/value of the red wines. Whether it's cabernet, merlot, shiraz, pinot noir or carménère, Casillero is an absolute winner. The carménère has a smoky, barbecued meat and cocoa aroma, with lush, juicy red-fruit flavor and a peppery finish. Shiraz-like in style, it's outstanding with a rare tuna steak.

Santa Rita Carménère Reserva

RAPEL VALLEY, 2008 ($12, Chauncy Liquor Mart, Boston). Santa Rita is another winery that doesn't miss. This wine finished in a dead heat with Casillero for best value carménère. It's similar in style, with bacon, dark red fruit and slightly more bell-pepper aroma. The Santa Rita has a prominent milk-chocolate note, with sweet, mellow flavors that coat the palate. Just a bit softer than the Casillero, it's super with spicy Latin dishes, or with casual fare like burgers.

Montes "Purple Angel" Carménère

COLCHAGUA VALLEY, 2006 ($65, Martignetti Liquors). And just to prove that carménère is fully capable of making world-class wine, this is the knockout champion in the ultra heavyweight category. An über-carménère of massive richness, it's not only delicious but also earth-accented with meaty notes, fragrant blueberry, almond extract, clove and mocha. Drink this smooth as silk beauty with a fine marbled steak. Worth every penny, you can also stash Purple Angel in the cellar and revisit it in seven to 10 years.

OUR TOWNE

Convention Center project to open this summer

Star ingredient

The time for hinting is over: Towne Stove & Spirits is officially gearing up to be the next big thing in Boston. With Lydia Shire and Jasper White as "culinary directors"—and backed by the first public/private partnership with the Massachusetts Convention Center Authority (with the Lyons Group)—Towne is poised to fill its 380 seats with visitors and locals drawn by the "global-inspired menu" of executive chef Mario Capone, who's worked with Shire for almost two decades. In addition to a roster of whole-roasted local seafood, Peking chicken and tandoori meats, Towne will offer an over-the-top specialty: a lobster tasting menu featuring 15 different preparations. Expect a midsummer debut.

IN THE SOUTH END, no date's been set for the Gallows to open in the former Sage space, but owner Rebecca Roth says the "neighborhood joint" will be worth the wait. "We want people to think of us as their second kitchen," Roth says, although chances are your kitchen isn't lined with a rebuilt Vermont barn. Chef/partner Seth Morrison's menu will range from bar bites—steak tartare, kimchee, Scotch eggs—to main dishes like a longshoreman's platter, with fish bought "directly off the boat," Roth says. Most entrées cost less than $20, and the burger is under 10 bucks.

GOOD-BYE, Alchemist Lounge; hello, Canary Square. The folks behind Coda and Common Ground plan to open a new restaurant in the Alchemist's location in Jamaica Plain. Comanaging partner Michael Moxley promises a "pretty detailed cocktail program, American craft beer" and a menu with "a low carbon footprint." As for timing, "we hope to be open by mid-July, but you never know."

Mopsy {MOPSY STRANGE KENNEDY}

A HEAVY MATTER

Tormenting piles of treasure and trash

'STUFFERS," OR EXTREME hoarders, could also be called "Stufferers." Because the perverse drive to create indoor mountains of "things" causes real suffering. And yet, hoarding also contains a seed—however moldy—of pleasure: Hoarders love the bottle caps and unwearable clothes that comprise their stash. Says one: "This outdated coupon seems as important as my grandmother's picture." Another man collects left-handed golf clubs, though he's neither left-handed nor a golfer.

As the often-intelligent and compelling characters in this book reveal, their skewed attachment to objects (or 200 cats!) makes them see parting, even with useless things, as a potential loss of their authentic selves. Weaving through the "goat paths" between ceiling-high piles, Irene expresses her dilemma: "If I throw too much away, there'll be nothing left of me." Living amid constipated belongings, they hope to fend off anxiety, loss and grief. Alas, simultaneously, this Clutterissimo drives them crazy. And families—some unable to find a junk-free bed to sleep on—break up. Health departments intervene. The authors therapeutically listen to the people they're studying, while also helping them, often fruitlessly, try to Throw Things Out! ×××

I called Susan a week later to check on how the rest of the cleaning had gone. 'Well, they finished it, but when I went for a visit the next day the security guard told me he had seen Daniel wheeling in shopping carts full of things all night after the cleanout.' Bombay Club moves to the South End.

TAKE A DIP The many flavors of Bombay Club and the colorful bar

OVER THREE VISITS, I enjoyed a culinary tour of India, courtesy of the professional, amiable staff at Bombay Club. Clearly enthusiastic about the food, they strive to inform, entice and send diners home satisfied and enlightened. Much of the staff has followed the eatery's migration from its long tenure near Harvard Square to its new location in the South End.

The Club's menu could use a little streamlining, though. Rather than list its offerings by geographical origin or some other descriptive category, it scatters them under headers like "Greatest Hits," "Specials" and "Originals." Classification quibbles aside, one of the originals, gobhi gulistan ($15), made a powerful statement, both in presentation and flavor. A head of steamed cauliflower, grilled over charcoal, rose from the plate like a small mountain and tasted so good it was impossible to stop eating. Dressed with a delectable yogurt sauce spiced with cilantro, chili, mint and cashews, its heat was balanced by mild, soothing daal (lentil stew). The lamb saag ($15), a greatest hit from the Cambridge days, featured tender, juicy hunks of lamb sprinkled with slivers of fresh ginger and coated in a pungent sauce of spinach, tomatoes and yogurt. Less memorable, but far from ordinary, was the lemon lamb ($15), spiced with whole black peppers.

One seafood starter, shrimp til-tinka ($9), disappointed with its four dry and rather small grilled shrimp, but fish pakora ($9) brought fresh, moist haddock battered with gram (chickpea) flour and fried to a crunchy, golden brown. Two delicious, contrasting condiments, a tart-sweet tamarind sauce and a yogurt with mint and cilantro, accompanied both the fish pakoras and an assorted pakora platter ($7), with fritters made of cauliflower, potatoes and onions, cheese and green chilies.

Biryani, India's answer to risotto, stars as a specialty of Hyderabad, in the south central part of the country. The Club's lamb biryani ($15) contained long-grain rice with sizable chunks of lamb, mostly tender, but with a few tough, gristly outliers. Small dishes of cooling daal and raita (yogurt with cucumber and mint) mitigated the significant heat. Giant dosas (crepes), a menu staple of Kerela in the subcontinent's far southwest, came with a choice of fillings. The chicken dosa ($15) contained spicy shreds of tender meat with side dishes of daal, medu vada (donut-shaped lentil fritters) and soothing idli (steamed rice cakes).

The mixed grill ($17) scored hits with ajwaini chicken kebabs, chunks of white meat marinated in yogurt with carom seeds and other spices, but the boti kebabs (skewered pieces of lamb) and tandoori chicken were dry and dull. Breads, on the other hand, achieved consistent success. Naan, paratha and methi poori ($2.50-$3.25) were light, aromatic and irresistible. Desserts, usually an afterthought for me in an Indian restaurant, featured a soft, flavorful gajar halwa (carrot cake, $9) garnished with raspberry sauce.

An excellent selection of draft beers, including the full-bodied Dogfish Head 90 Minute IPA ($7) and the slightly sweet, mellow Brooklyn Brown Ale ($6), went well with the food and relaxed atmosphere. The Bombay Club's design is agreeable, with earth-tone walls and well-spaced tables. A steady stream of Indian dance videos plays above the colorfully lit bar. It's a fun look at a culture the kitchen admirably represents. ×××

OPEN ARMS

Americans need rules for greetings.

WHEN I WAS 11, A French kid named Chris moved in down the street, and we became friends. So when Chris returned to France over the summer, I went to visit. By month's end, I'd pretty much gone native—another week or two, and I would've been wearing a beret, smoking Gauloises and caring about soccer. But one thing I didn't quite master was the French penchant for the hug-and-kiss greeting. The rarest and most mystifying move was the nuclear option, the man-to-man cheek kiss.

This greeting reared its head as we were leaving for America. After side-cheeking Chris' uncle, who had some impressive Don Johnson beard stubble, I tried to impress everyone with my newly acquired French by saying that his face felt like a hedgehog's. The word for hedgehog is "hérisson," but unfortunately I butchered the pronunciation and said something that sounded more like "érotique." Which means "sexy." Chris tells me that his family still talks about the time I kissed his uncle and called him sexy.

My personal gaffe was a tiny foreshadowing of a much bigger social epidemic: the American fascination with amorous, European-style greetings. Every time Americans try to act European, we get it wrong. Europeans can drink wine at lunch and not get drunk, while Americans try the same thing and end up with puke on their shoes. European guys can ride mopeds and look sophisticated. American guys get on a moped and look like they can't afford a car. And Europeans can smooch casual acquaintances all day long. Meanwhile, from Bangor to San Diego, we're head-butting each other when we're not kissing people's ears.

I, for one, am the master of whiffing on the hello hug. Guys go for the bro-hug, and I look like I'm trying to resist participation in a tango. Women go for the kiss, and I make a smooching noise somewhere in the airspace around their temples. I can't tell exactly when I'm supposed to hug anyone, so I end up doing a Frankenstein move, where my arms are stiffly extended, but I'm not really committing. Want hug? Want hug Ezra? Rahhhhhghghgh!

In France they've been doing this for centuries, so they've developed guidelines. For instance, the man-kiss only happens under very specific conditions. Chris tells me, "With family members, especially when I only see them once a year, we're supposed to kiss between guys. But only on the first day that I'm there—then we can move back to the handshake for the everyday greet until the day I leave again." There's a protocol, and we definitely need protocol in these matters.

America, though, is all willy-nilly. By my estimate, 65 percent of people are huggers, but you never know who's who until it's too late. If both parties are hug-ambivalent, you get a series of feints and lunges, a slow-motion dance of disaster that culminates with a stilted, robotic collision. I've known my friend Kara since high school, and every time we see each other there comes that moment when both of us are plainly thinking, "OK, do we hug now? This is the time when we hug. Better just get this over with."

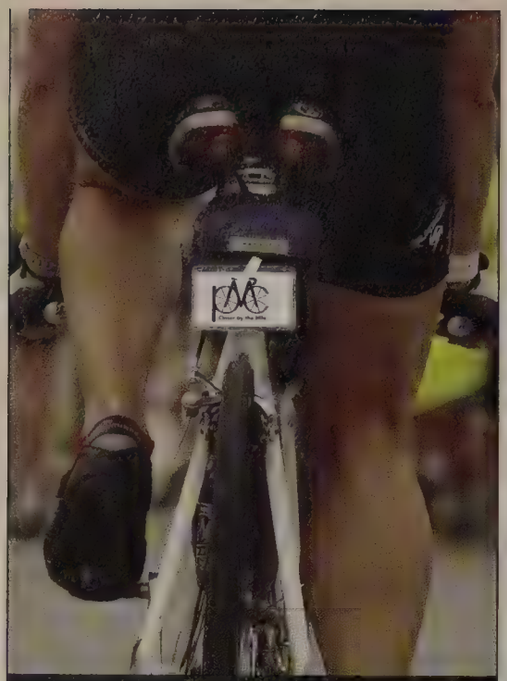
I'm not alone in my confusion. I asked Chris what he thinks of the American appropriation of European-style greetings. "America has no rules with hugs," he says. "You hug family, strangers, old friends. But not every day—just when it's been a while. But how do you know when it's been long enough? There needs to be some rules."



I agree. For instance, I was leaving a party a couple years ago, and the host seemed to be kissing everyone good-bye. Maybe some of the people ahead of me were his French relatives about to depart for a transatlantic journey, thus qualifying them for the farewell cheek-smooch—I just don't know. What matters is that I didn't want to be rude, so I went in for the cheek-smooch thing. I don't think he was expecting it, thus causing one of the most uncomfortable moments in Boston social history. If awkwardness were atomic energy, that farewell would've blown up the universe.

To prevent catastrophes like that one, we need to either lay a set of ground rules or quit acting so touchy-feely. I'd say that if you've known someone for less than five years and seen them within the past six months, hugs are off. No kissing unless you're related. In the case of enthusiastically friendly male friends, the bro hug will be signaled at a distance sufficient for the opposite party to prepare his left hand for some hearty back-slapping, bro. And when in doubt, simply extend your right hand. I'll shake on that. ✖✖✖

Chances Are You've Been Sitting on a Cure for Cancer

Before Lance, even before LeMond, there was the Pan-Mass Challenge, a 190-mile bike-a-thon that brought cycling to the American consciousness. Since 1980, the Pan-Mass Challenge has raised $270 million for cancer research. Today, 100 percent of every rider-raised dollar goes directly to that cause.

PMC 2010 – August 7 & 8 – 5,000 cyclists from 36 states and 6 countries will ride. Are you ready to take the Pan-Mass Challenge?

FREE ADVICE

How to answer cries for help

ALL OF US, even if seldomly, do things for other people. Sometimes we do them for business, sometimes for love, sometimes out of guilt. Maybe we just want to volunteer and help. For the right or wrong reasons, it's the way the world works. I'm lucky, in this regard; I often get asked to do things. In my office, I have my "freebie pile"—three feet of single-page cries for assistance. There are résumés, business plans, patent applications, liquor-license proposals, immigration forms, pleas for money, sponsorships for various organizations and internships, college and graduate-school recommendations. Everything imaginable, except requests for blind dates. Those come by phone for some strange reason. "Don't you know any women? Don't you know any men?" I always say, "No, I don't."

On the freebie front, I have some firm principles, learned the hard way, through bitter experience. Never agree to be a trustee or an executor of an estate or trust unless you get compensated. Never do it for love and not money. Years ago in my naïve stage, I agreed to be the co-executor for an older man I considered a mentor and friend. Before he died I told him, "I'll never take a fee because of what you've taught me." Sure enough, the cotrustee died six months after my friend, leaving me with the sole responsibility of handling the estate and the dysfunctional beneficiaries. I hadn't counted on their erratic behavior, as if they came from another galaxy. One beneficiary demanded I get her an American Express gold card made out to "Many Steps." The other beneficiary lived in Mitteleuropa where she intended to run for Parliament—as soon as she learned the language. I couldn't resign because I couldn't find anyone to take my place.

I've also had to help get several people who've died abroad airlifted home, dealing with bureaucracies and the U.S. government. My office crew arranged for a client's hippie child to have a new credit card FedEx'd to Kathmandu. On this subject, did you ever stop to count how many young converts to Buddhism in the eastern United States seem to have trust funds? In my experience, they've all had independent money or families who enabled them.

Years ago, our office had a client who owned a shoe-manufacturing business. Next to his factory, he opened a small outlet-store selling his shoes at cheap prices for cash. I never knew before what a cash business really meant. It meant you could steal from the business without anyone catching you. Our office manager would send me, the flunky, to visit the client and pick up packages from him. "Take a cab back," he'd tell me. Once, I thought, "I'll save the manager some money, take the subway back." The subway got stuck between stations, and it took me an hour to return with the package. The manager almost fired me on the spot. The package was full of cash the client was skimming from the retail outlet. It was legal then to accept cash, and nobody could trace its source. "I wouldn't take a client like this," I said to the manager.

"Well, it's not your client," he said to me. "But it's a lesson in human nature you shouldn't forget."

This, of course, was a freebie that crossed the line. Sometime later, I was invited to lunch with a client who had manufacturing facilities in Europe. He was a difficult, aggressive man who did a lot of stock trading, and intimidation was his best quality. The sidebar here is also a business lesson: I was a relatively young stockbroker with a family, and the man did give me a lot of commissions. Be careful of relationships where the client owns you. In the long run, they do more harm, emotional and otherwise. Better to bite the bullet and ditch them. You'll sleep better at night. At lunch, my aggressive client asked me, "Do you have contacts in Europe?"

"I have various friends there," I said.

"Do you have a friend discreet enough for a nice payday, to ferry some bonds of mine from Italy to Switzerland?"

"Why wouldn't you do it?" I asked.

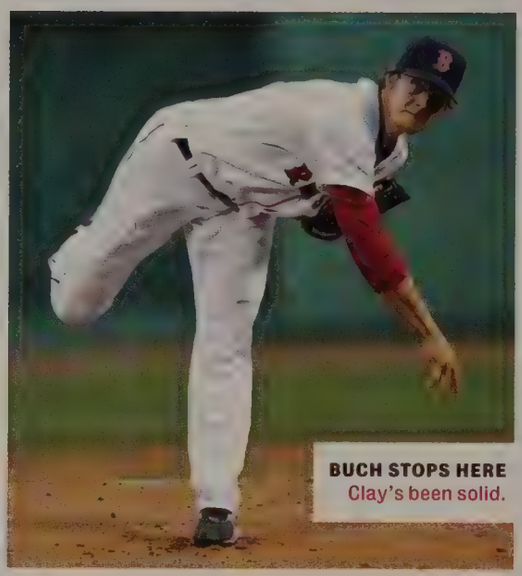
He looked straight into my eyes as if he were right out of some Peter Lorre movie from the 1940s. "Because I'm too busy to travel to Europe now. And the payday is generous for something so simple." I got up.

"It's not what I do," I said and walked into the sunlight. You never know people until you deal with their money.

A last note: Freebies include people asking to borrow money. This is the ultimate freebie. My friend Joe the philosopher says, "The best way to get rid of a pain in the ass is to loan them money. You'll never hear from them again."

This is good advice. And it's free. ×××

TAKE 5



The School of Sports { RICH LEVINE }

5 SOX SURPRISES

Feats of Clay Clay Buchholz having a solid season doesn't come as much of a surprise (this is what we've been waiting for). What does is that, after a month, he's the Sox most consistent starter. So, thanks, Clay. We won't forget about you in August, when the Sox are surging, and you're staying classy in San Diego.

BUCH STOPS HERE
Clay's been solid.

Big Slapi A few years back, David Ortiz could've slaughtered Wally in front of a pack of school children and still received a standing O at Fenway. So the fact that he's now consistently booed is a serious surprise. But while his on-field faults have fueled the boo birds, that positive PED test is the heart of the matter. Fans can deal with a player struggling, but the idea that Papi's prior success was disingenuous is still the slow, fat, ineffective elephant in the room.

The Laser Show Last season, it took Dustin Pedroia 101 games to hit his seventh home run. This season? Twenty-six games. That's, as the French say, "surprising." And best of all, you could never accuse the guy of taking steroids, unless they're the kind you inject directly into your vocal chords.

Running on Empty At press time, only three Red Sox players are hitting above .300: Adrian Beltre, Jason Varitek and Mike Lowell. Yeeeikes. You have to feel good for Tek and Lowell, seeing as how they both looked fit for a nursing home last month. But still. This lineup is run-prevention at its finest.

Broken Record They're a .500 team right now. And while no one expected the Sox to run away with the division, everyone thought they'd be better than this. So far, most of the blame has to fall on Lackey, Lester and Beckett. We knew the bats would struggle; it's the starters who were supposed to carry this team.

2 BRUINS BITS

Jambalaya This is slightly (OK, completely) random, but there's something about the Bruins' run through the playoffs that reminds me of the 1997 Pats: the low expectations, the favorable matchups, the upsets within the conference. The stars have inexplicably aligned in their favor. And lucky for them, Desmond Howard can't skate for shit.

Keeping With the B's/Pats Analogy But you also have to wonder if the Bruins didn't just suffer their own version of Wes Welker's torn ACL. David Krejci was an essential part of the their offensive attack. He was pure energy, a guy who was always in the middle of the action. And now the B's must move on without him. Lucky for them, Ray Rice can't skate for shit.

3 on the C's

Turning It On Regardless of what happens in the rest of the Cavs series, it seems that the Celtics have proven their point: It's possible to turn it on in the playoffs. And while we're all psyched about it now, I'm also a little nervous for what might happen next season. If Sheed stays hot in the playoffs, he could decide to play left-handed.

D-(Picture of a Fence) It's crazy to think that Rajon Rondo's already made his first NBA All-Defensive team. But what's even crazier is that he's now in line to rattle off a legendary streak. In the NBA, once you make a first team, the spot is essentially yours to lose. And if the 24-year-old Rondo can maintain his current level, the awards will keep coming. Gary Payton made it nine straight times, a streak that didn't start until he was 25.

In Need of Assistance For the third year, everyone seems convinced that Tom Thibodeau's leaving Boston. I'm wondering why this time will be any different. His stock was highest after Boston won the title. This past season proved that the Celtics' earlier defensive dominance was more a matter of a healthy KG than it was some legendary scheme.

1 ONE PATS PREDICTION

I'll admit to having an unusual obsession with rookie receivers. You can blame Terry Glenn. I think every single one is going to be a Pro Bowler. But still, Taylor Price has me excited. Start preparing yourself for countless cheesy "Price Is Right" headlines.

4 DATES TO WATCH

5/13: The Celtics and Cavs come back to Boston for Game 6 of the Eastern Conference Semis. This is only "if necessary," but David Stern will make sure it's very, very necessary.

5/17: The Sox head to the Bronx for a quick two-game series with the Yankees. And by quick, I mean the two games will last a combined 37 hours.

5/19: Kevin Garnett turns 34, but more important, the Big 3 officially turn 100! Um... congratulations?

5/21: The Sox take on the Phillies at Citizens Bank Park, where—whether you like it or not—you're probably getting tasered.

Soroff On LESLIE OSBORNE

The pro-soccer star talks about back-heel passes, butt structure and getting to know Boston.

THE BOSTON BREAKERS' NEWEST STAR MIDFIELDER LESLIE Osborne grew up in Wisconsin and attended Santa Clara University in California. Osborne, 27, helped the school clinch the 2001 NCAA soccer championship and won a Honda Award her senior year as the nation's top female athlete in her sport. She's a member of the U.S. Women's National Team, but a torn ACL prevented her from playing in the Beijing Olympics in 2008. Osborne has coached at both the club and college levels, and she operates her own camp and clinics. A model for Puma, she volunteers for the Boys and Girls Clubs and supports Grassroot Soccer.

Jonathan Soroff: Ever get confused for Sharon or Kelly Osbourne?
Leslie Osborne: No, but people ask me if I'm related to them all the time.

Do you have a nickname?
Most people call me Les, but my soccer nickname that coaches and teammates use is Ozzy, which I don't love, but what can you do?

What are people shocked to learn about you?
That I'm from Wisconsin. I think people see me and assume I'm a California girl, but I'm a Midwesterner.

Do people appreciate women's soccer more in other countries?
Yeah. It's at a whole different level. Here, women's soccer is more popular than men's, especially with the youth. But on the professional level, we've only been around a short while. It will take some time, but one day, it will grow into what it's like in other countries.

How much fan mail do you get on a daily basis?
I get stuff sent a lot to the offices, and I have my website where kids and fans can e-mail me. I usually get e-mails every day, and I'm pretty good about sending pictures and autographs back to people.

How often do you get a pedicure?
Once every two to three weeks, because my feet take a beating.

Does the pedicure lady recoil when she sees your feet?
[Laughs.] I think she did the first few times, but now she knows what I do, and there are big soccer fans in the salon. But at first she was like, "Whoa!"

One thing you can do with your feet that I can't do with mine?
Can you juggle a ball? Can you do a rainbow or a back-heel pass or a bicycle kick?

Definitely not. What's the most unconventional thing you've ever done with a soccer ball?
Ummm, stuck it under my shirt to make me look pregnant on Halloween. We also play beach volleyball and pretty much any water sport with a soccer ball.

Who can run faster: you or a cheetah?
A cheetah, for sure. I'm not the fastest player. I have long legs, so I can tackle and catch up to people, but I'm not really that fast.

Do female athletes get the respect they deserve?
I think there's a long way to go. I think there's a lot of potential for us to get the same respect as men do, but we're not there yet.

Worst soccer injury?
When I tore my ACL, I tore both my ankles, too. I've had both my ankles reconstructed. I have basically a new leg on the left side.

Worst part of physical therapy?
The mental, psychological aspect. I was in a cast and a boot and a knee brace for two months, so the waiting, and not being able to do any physical activity, was very hard because I'm such an active person.

Body part that hurts the most after a game?
I'd say probably the quads or butt muscles.

Do soccer players have the best butts of any athletes?
I think female soccer players have very nice legs and butts. Most people can tell we play soccer by looking at our legs and butts. There's just a different structure from playing.

Are Bostonians standoffish or rude?
I've only been here a short while. But even today, I'll have someone who's really rude to me, and then I'll get someone who's surprisingly nice and helpful. I'm getting these drastic examples. People are just really different here than in the Midwest or California.

So who would win in a fistfight: Kristine Lilly or Mia Hamm?
I'm gonna go with Lil. She's small, but she's feisty, and her arms have some pretty serious muscles. I might get into big trouble for that.

Strangest fan encounter?
Well, I run my own camps and clinics in the summer, and this woman was eight-and-a-half months pregnant. Her daughter was in our camp, and she had me sign her stomach in permanent marker. The following summer, she brought the baby to see us. So that was interesting.

What's your recovery drink of choice?
Muscle Milk Light.

Do you like the modeling aspect of the job?
I love it. I love fashion, and I'm comfortable in front of cameras. If I wasn't a soccer player, I'd want to be involved in fashion somehow. It's really fun to be aggressive on the field and then step off and be a girlie girl.

What kind of deodorant do you use?
Dove. Very basic.

Who's the Breakers' biggest rival?
I think New Jersey, Sky Blue. We couldn't beat them last year.

How do you bond with the other players?
Music is definitely one thing. We dance in the locker room. We have a lot of team dinners, like tonight we're going out for sushi, and we shop together.

How often do you wear high heels?
Just bought a new pair today. I'm comfortable in heels. My ankles get a little upset with me, but it's usually just at night, so they can deal with it.

Fill in the blank: Soccer players do it _____.
For 90 minutes. ×××

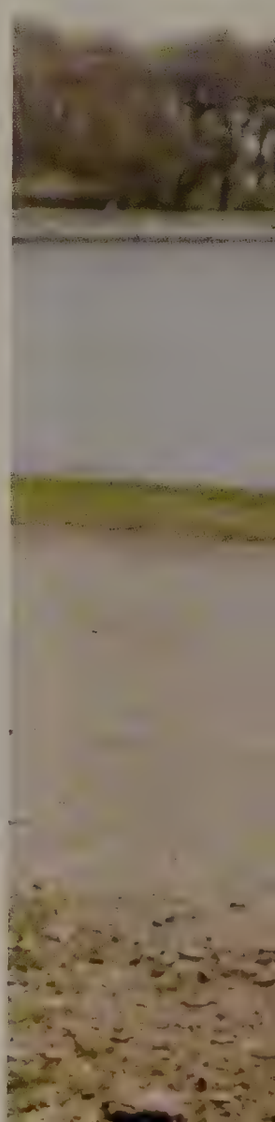
CBS SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR AYLA BROWN TALKS FITNESS AND FAME.

BY NANCY GAINES • PHOTOGRAPHS BY MATT TEUTEN

AYLA BROWN, the Boston College basketball star, and her father, Scott, the newly minted U.S. senator from Massachusetts, were playing a pickup game in March to raise money for a Norwood boy paralyzed by a hockey injury. On opposing teams, the Browns wound up covering each other. That's when the family colors flared.



As Ayla tells it: "It was a charity game, right? Dad and I were so competitive. When it was over, we asked Mom"—TV reporter Gail Huff—"who had the better score, who did better. Like a mother, she said, 'You both were great.' We kept asking, and she finally said, 'But I think Ayla had more points.'

"And Dad says, 'No way! Look at all my threes,'" referring to the storied shooting that earned him the high-school moniker Downtown Scotty Brown. "He had one layup and four threes," Ayla recalls. "I had more: six layups and three threes. Do the math."

Ayla's numbers always seem to impress, starting with her age. At 21, she's a light industry unto herself. She competes and excels at music, sports, media—with three albums to her name and a gig as a CBS special contributor. Ayla may be a fallen idol, but she's still an icon.

Particularly when it comes to fitness. Playing for the BC team, she consistently won the "shuttle test"—running up and down the court for 300 yards in 58 seconds or less. As Men's Health magazine described the exercise, "If you can cover 300 yards in 60 seconds, you have the speed and drive you need for just about anything."

Ayla lacks neither. "For the first time, I have no mandatory workouts," she says at the season's close, "but I don't like sitting on my butt. It's important for everyone to work out on a daily basis."

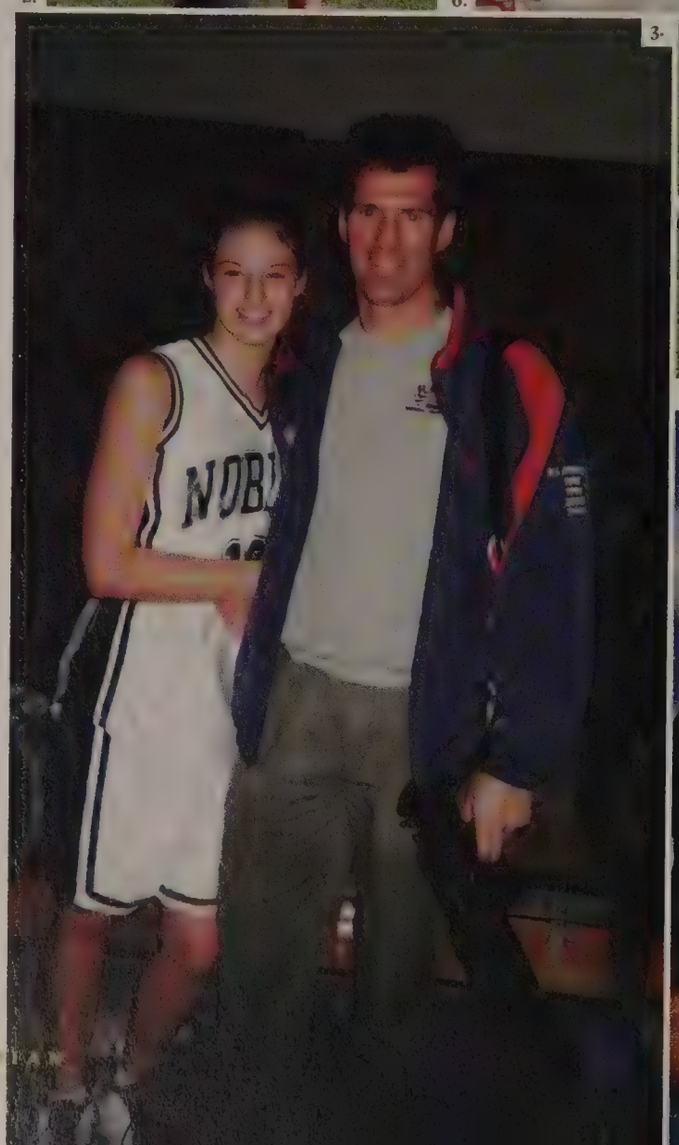
She now takes a 90-minute jazz/exercise class two days a week, which is "really physically demanding."

Once upon a time, Ayla was best known as the 2006 American Idol contestant ousted in the semifinals. But that brush with celebrity missed many salient points. She was also a three-sport star in eighth grade at Dedham's Noble & Greenough School. As a high-school hoopster, she once notched 40 points. At 15, she became the youngest female roundball recruit signed to a scholarship at Boston College.

After American Idol, Ayla released her albums (several singles reached No. 1 on Internet countdowns), appeared on TV talk shows and starred in a local production of Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat. She also became known as "the anthem girl," singing the "Star-Spangled Banner" at events like the Celtics playoffs, the 2006 Fourth of July celebration on the Esplanade and at this year's NCAA women's Final Four.

Still, Ayla found time for the court. The Cal Ripken of BC women's b-ball, she played in more games than any other Eagle. Ranking sixth in all-time rebounds and 13th in steals, she was named to the 2009-10 All-ACC Academic Women's Basketball Team.

But a move from guard to a post position this season didn't suit her as well. "I was not enjoying it at the end," she admits. Nonetheless, she won both the team's "Energizer bunny" and best rebounder awards for her play in BC's upset over Duke.



More recently, Ayla got a boost working in her father's campaign for Ted Kennedy's Senate seat, appearing with younger sister Arianna in commercials. Then came the "Scott Heard 'Round the World." Flushed with exuberance the night of his upset victory in January, he told the crowd—and international media—that Ayla was available for dating.

Naturally, Ayla found time to play softball, too. 6. The family that plays together... 7. Ayla joined her father on lots of [illegible] and duathalons. 8. A pre-natorial Brown during a triathalon.

Ayla did that one better, declaring a few days later on CBS' Early Show that she and her father were available to challenge President Obama and the player of his choice at hoops. Obama's been shooting around with CBS' Harry Smith and ESPN's Clark Kellogg, but has yet to take up her offer. Still, Ayla sufficiently wowed the producers behind the Early Show to hire her.

So many celebs brandish their riches (and rehab stints) that the functional Brown family seems refreshingly exotic by comparison. Indeed, despite his full-time political career and his law practice, her father missed only a handful of Ayla's games. He coached her and Arianna, now 19 and a pre-med student at Syracuse University, in their youth. Her mom—at Boston's WCVB-TV Channel 5 since 1993—worked the early shift to be home in the afternoon.

"Sports were so natural for me, obviously 'cause of my dad," Ayla says. Senator Brown (whose HarperCollins book contract prevented a pre-publication interview) was a star basketball player at Wakefield High School and Tufts University. An accomplished triathlete, he makes it a priority to exercise (running, biking, swimming and sometimes lifting). Ayla says that on the day of her baptism, her father had ■ league basketball playoff, "so he wore his basketball shorts to the church under his suit." She adds, "Dad was my best coach."

Her father was with her when she went for her recruitment interview at BC. He was also with her when she got voted off Idol. "When it was over, Scott told Ayla the biggest lesson in life is to learn by losing. Ayla said, 'Yeah, right.' Now she says, 'What an amazing lesson. Life goes on. That loss was my biggest gain.'"

With both showmanship and sports in her genes, Ayla is focusing on her singing and her TV work. A communications major at BC, she's comfortable with the patois and the technology. Plus, she says, the assignment capitalizes on her connection to sports and young people. Her debut segment featured the youngest person to attempt to climb Mount Everest.

"Ayla is blessed with many gifts, which can be disarming or intimidating. But she handles it well because she understands that to those to whom much is given, much is expected," says her mother, quoting, ironically, Ted Kennedy's mother.

"Athletics is very important to her energy, and how she stays grounded," Huff continues. "She's such a team player. She'll sacrifice herself for others. That's the ultimate lesson from sports."

A few weeks ago, Ayla was working out with her parents at the BC gym. Her folks swam, then biked. Ayla was on the elliptical, pushing herself (surprise). Then she did laps. "Dad timed me," she recalls, "and he said, 'Hey, you could be an Olympic triathlete.' I said, 'No.' But you never know. I'm so competitive, you never know.

"I don't know what it's like not to be competitive," she adds. "The other day I was running around the Res"—the reservoir abutting BC—"just for fun. By the end, I was catching and passing people purposely. And I said, 'What am I doing? My season just ended. I can relax.'"

LIQUID ASSET

HOW TWO LOCALS CONCOCTED THE LATEST RECOVERY DRINK.

MOST STORIES ABOUT HEALTH AND FITNESS DON'T start with a hangover, but this one begins with a doozy.

Five years ago, former BU roommates Jeff Frumin and Michael Sachs were in Miami for the MTV Video Music Awards. As is customary in South Beach, they stayed out until at least 3 am every night, but Sachs also had to be up early and in his office by 8 am, working as a brand manager for Bacardi and Grey Goose. Burning the candle at both ends was putting a world of hurt on both of them. →

→ "We'd heard of people drinking Pedialyte [which is used to rehydrate sick children]," Frumin says, "so we went out and bought some. It seemed like it worked, but it didn't taste so great."

The experience was the inspiration for Code Blue, the "recovery" drink the pair brought to market and that now has a following among professional athletes. Gyms on both coasts sell the product as a way to help their patrons bounce back after physical exertion.

"It's funny," says Jeff Klineman, the editor of BevNET and Beverage Spectrum magazine. "Gatorade, which was traditionally a sports drink, became a big hangover drink. What [Frumin and Sachs] did was take a hangover drink and turn it into a sports/workout recovery drink."

To develop Code Blue, they first met with a food scientist who'd worked on Gatorade. Their idea for a "nutraceutical" was to create an all-natural drink that worked and tasted good. In their first year, they went through roughly 300 iterations of different recipes. Packing it with vitamins and electrolytes was the easy part. Getting it not to taste like a science experiment was a different story. They relied on research published in academic journals, studying the competition, reviewing anecdotes they'd heard from athletes about coping with post-performance recovery, and consulting with doctors and scientists.

"What [Frumin and Sachs] did was take a hangover drink and turn it into a sports/workout recovery drink."

"We ended up working with five or six scientists," Frumin says, "in Chicago, Kentucky, all over the place. We even worked with the guy who was formerly in charge of Snapple's formulation."

What they eventually settled on was a drink that was neither too tart nor too sweet, with a refreshing zing. The flavor profile is prickly pear (the cactus fruit) and agave nectar (a sweetener with a low glycemic index, which means it's easier to metabolize). A can of Code Blue has 60 calories, contains no caffeine or preservatives, and has three times the electrolytes of most sports drinks (without any of the sugar and other carbohydrates), not to mention high dosages of vitamins B-12, B-6 and C, antioxidants and milk thistle (a flower extract reputed to protect and detoxify the liver).

But the supposedly key ingredient is Sustamine, a liquid form of the amino acids glutamine and alanine, which are depleted by exercise. "I can't say whether Sustamine is a better restorative than other things that claim to stimulate the liver," Klineman says, "but I can say it seems to work on the salt and hydration concept. Based on the latest science, the chemistry seems pretty sound."

Sound or not, the drink already has a fan base. "It's amazing the way it's taken off," Frumin says. "Originally, it was a late-night, party-hard recovery drink, but our best accounts in New York are the after-workout market. We have tons of trainers and spin instructors recommending it, and people are even saying it helps them get over jet lag."

Not everyone has jumped on the bandwagon, however. Sports nutritionist Nancy Clark, whose client list has included Red Sox and Celtics players, awaits additional studies. "I'd like to see more research," says Clark, who has a private practice at Healthworks in Chestnut Hill. "The one study I've seen is in a journal that's very pro-industry—not that that's right or wrong—but we need a little more science and comparison to other beverages that impact performance."

For Frumin and Sachs, the science was just one step in a larger process. Next, they had to pick a name. "We came up with Code Blue because the drink has a blue tinge to it, and it's the medical and emergency term for when someone needs to be resuscitated," Frumin says. "It seems like a no-brainer, but it was actually one of the most difficult parts."

So was the packaging and design, since they needed a product that could stand out in settings as diverse as convenience stores, gyms and nightclubs. Their initial attempt, in a plastic bottle, was quickly scrapped for a silver-and-blue can they hoped would convey a healthful and hip profile. It had to look as natural in the hands of an MLB MVP as with a Hollywood bad boy on a three-day bender.

It had to look as natural in the hands of an MLB MVP as with a Hollywood badboy on a three-day bender.

WHEN IT CAME TIME TO seek funding, Frumin (whose brother, Steven, was also on board as a principal) and Sachs found their product was more than a pipe dream. Initial investors included Tom First, cofounder of Nantucket Nectars, and Jack Belsito, the former CEO of Snapple and current CEO of Voss (the fancy water in the cylindrical bottle). Both have decent track records for backing the right pony.

Belsito says, "I thought of it as a well-differentiated entry in an uncrowded market with a lot of potential." In other words, a moneymaker, although Frumin and Sachs aren't reporting sales numbers yet.

First, who began building his fortune selling juice blends to sailors off a skiff in Nantucket Harbor, also saw potential. "I invested in the company because of Jeff and Michael," he says. "They're passionate. The brand is innovative."

Money in hand, the partners approached 100 accounts in Boston and New York, and managed to get the product into chain stores including Duane Reade, 7-Eleven, Tedeschi, Walgreens and City Convenience (no mean feat in a highly competitive market, where shelf space is at a premium). They also played both sides of the fence by placing it in hotels and nightclubs (the W and most of the spots in the Theater District where 20-somethings down shots), liquor stores and supermarkets, racquet clubs and gyms (the Sports Club/LA and Equinox)—even a retail outlet inside a hospital (Beth Israel).

After only a year, Code Blue counts pro athletes—like Brian Scalabrine and Ray Allen of the Celtics and Josh Beckett of the Red Sox—among its devotees. It's been included in the swag bags at awards ceremonies and the welcome baskets at celebrity weddings. There are reports of pop stars and actors relying on Code Blue to recover from grueling rehearsals. Last year it won BevNET's "Best Functional Beverage" award, and now retailers (and potential investors) are beginning to circle.

In the search for buzz, Frumin and Sachs sent cases to baseball spring training. Soon they'll be launching the Code Blue Ambulance to patrol the streets of hard-partying cities like Las Vegas—a market they're planning to crack next month.

Because face it: For some people, drinking is a sport. ✖✖✖

Ajami ★★ ½ One of this year's Oscar nominees for best foreign language film, this collaboration between Palestinian Scandar Copti and Israeli Yaron Shani is a nerve-jangling crime drama chronicling the ways sectarian strife creeps into everything, including the underworld. As a collection of crossed wires and doomed good intentions set in the Tel Aviv suburb of Yaffa, the movie makes it clear that surviving in this neighborhood is hard enough without also having to take part in a Holy War. Ajami is broken into six overlapping chapters, each following a different protagonist on a slightly skewed timeline. But the more that's revealed, the more Copti and Shani's puzzle starts to seem gimmicky and cheap. There's a vivid sense of place, and it's impossible not to feel for these young characters, but a more straightforward telling may have granted Ajami the noble inevitability of tragedy. As is, it's merely clever. (At West Newton.)

Alice In Wonderland ★ ½ It's hard to remember now, but there was a time when Tim Burton was an original, exciting filmmaker and not just a brand name. These days, you know his formula. Burton takes an existing property and gussies it up with kooky production design and overindulgent performances from his wife, Helena Bonham Carter, and his other wife, Johnny Depp. The extravagant failure of Alice in Wonderland feels like nothing more than a once-great director beating his head against the brick wall of an artistic dead end. Not an adaptation of Lewis Carroll's book but a sequel, Linda Woolverton's screenplay finds a 19-year-old Alice returning to a Wonderland she barely recalls visiting. If this sounds familiar, that's because Steven Spielberg used the same faulty scenario for his awful Peter Pan flick, Hook. This bizarre rip-off of one of history's biggest bombs is a joyless, empty film. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Babies ★ ½ We get it, they're cute. Enough already. Lacking narrative, dialogue or really anything a reasonable person might expect when plunking down $10 to see a movie, Thomas Balmes' pseudo-documentary is just a lot of shots of babies acting like… babies. They coo; they warble; sometimes they cry. End of plot synopsis. Spending about a year or so following four tots from Mongolia, Namibia, Tokyo and San Francisco, the movie simply shows kids doing what they do. I guess the locations are meant to hint at some universal truth, like perhaps cultural and geographic differences don't matter all that much when you're a barely-sentient newborn. This rainbow coalition of cute kids behaves identically. They're all adorable until they get hungry or have to go to the bathroom. They're also boring. Spending time with babies you know can be a moment-to-moment journey of discovery and joy. But not when they're strangers. This isn't a movie. It's a screensaver. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Bounty Hunter ★ Do you think Jennifer Aniston and Gerard Butler even bother to watch their films? What is it with these two? If I see either one on a movie poster, I know I'm in for a night of crap. In this desultory, abysmally directed action-comedy, Butler stars as a drunken skiptracer charged with dragging his embittered ex-wife (Aniston) to jail. She's a tough-talking reporter (sure, she is) investigating a suicide that may have been a murder. Think they'll uncover the truth? Wonder if they'll get back together? Boasting production values unfit for late-night cable flicks, the movie looks washed-out and cheap. Butler is loutish and unappealing, while Aniston remains improbably tanned and glammed. No effort whatsoever was expended in the making of this movie. (In the suburbs.)

Clash of the Titans ★ ½ The original 1981 Clash of the Titans might've been a silly, turgid film, but at least it had an endearing campiness. The remake is all business, as one scene even trashes the previous picture's robot owl sidekick as a symbolic gesture. Sam Worthington, who also starred in Terminator: Salvation and Avatar without displaying a single personality trait, plays Perseus, the demigod illegitimate son of Zeus who takes on the heavens in a holy war. Worthington faces some arbitrary tasks, whose random rules are explained by other characters just seconds before the battle begins. Things drone on like a video game, with Perseus defeating one generic monster after another, and then starting over from scratch in the very next scene. This new Clash is so flat and by the numbers, it actually made me long for that annoying robot owl. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

A Nightmare on Elm Street ★

Starring Jackie Earle Haley, Kyle Gallner, Rooney Mara, Katie Cassidy, Clancy Brown and Connie Britton. Screenplay by Wesley Strick and Eric Heisserer, based on a story and characters by Wes Craven. Directed by Samuel Bayer. At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.

I GUESS YOU HAVE TO HAND IT to producer Michael Bay. His company, Platinum Dunes, has made untold millions with slicked-up remakes of the crummy horror movies I grew up watching on late-night cable. Ironically, the paucity of ideas and glossy homogeneity of Bay's house style has given me a new appreciation for all those hours I seemingly wasted as a teenage couch potato.

I never thought I'd write a kind word about the original Friday the 13th until confronted with Bay's even more worthless reboot last February. Ditto for The Hitcher. The cadre of commercial- and music-video directors at Platinum Dunes has a knack for ignoring all their source materials' subtext and sanding off all the rough edges that made those films feel dangerous in the first place. Every Platinum Dunes movie looks like an episode of The Hills, only less frightening.

A Nightmare on Elm Street is a particular travesty, as this time Bay and company are messing with a movie that, albeit crude and dated, was packed with ideas way above its pay grade. Writer/director Wes Craven's 1984 original arrived at the end of Ronald Reagan's first term to subversively skewer the "morning in America" idyll. The tranquil suburb of Springwood was rocked by Robert Englund's creepy pervert Freddy Krueger, seeking revenge on the vigilante parents who burned him to death by haunting the dreams of their children.

Before you could say "the sins of the father" or mention the McMartin trial, the original Nightmare on Elm Street's gimcrack landscape incorporated some empowering lessons. Freddy wasn't defeated by brute force. Freddy lost because Nancy Thompson turned her back and decided that she wasn't going to be scared of him anymore. Craven is a former college professor whose thematic reach tends to exceed his cinematic grasp, but trust me, this was some heady stuff to absorb as a 10-year-old.

Alas, any such underpinnings are missing from the new Nightmare on Elm Street, a lobotomized, unpleasant karaoke-rendition of Craven's original that gets a couple lyrics right while remaining stubbornly out of tune.

Director Samuel Bayer—who helmed Nirvana's "Smells Like Teen Spirit" video, much to the consternation of Kurt Cobain—defiantly ignores the story's endless possibilities. Given a budget 15 times that of the original and provided with countless technological advancements that should make anything possible, Bayer's vision is utterly banal. Every dream sequence ends up in the same soundstage boiler room. Every scare is telegraphed by a grinding-metal sound effect, and all of Craven's more thoughtful elements have been dutifully excised from the script.

What a spectacular failure of imagination.

What a spectacular failure of imagination, to have access to your characters' wildest dreams and yet still film them all in a single, pedestrian location? Bayer hits upon almost every iconic image from the original picture, yet does so almost grudgingly. Often, the most famous shots don't even mesh with the scenes they've been shoehorned into, and just feel like lame shout-outs to us older folks in the crowd.

Frankly, the way the new Nightmare on Elm Street plays out doesn't make any sense. Most of the exposition involves using a fictional Internet search engine apparently designed solely to supply teenagers with plot information. Even more problematic is the casting of Jackie Earle Haley as Krueger, as the former child star recently mounted a helluva comeback with his harrowing portrait of a pedophile in Todd Field's Little Children.

Touted as "a child-killer" in Craven's picture, we were always left to assume that Freddy Krueger was up to other things with the kids of Springwood, but the original movie was wise enough not to go there. Not so for the remake. How telling is it about the diseased mindset of these filmmakers that the only aspect of this tale they choose to explore is a graphic history of Freddy's molestation tactics?

Upping the ante with sick flashbacks and shots of crying preschool girls with razor-fingernail scratches on their backs does not in any way enrich this saga. Giving Freddy a lair full of perverted Polaroids he took of Nancy as a child does nothing to make A Nightmare on Elm Street any scarier. It just makes the whole enterprise feel tawdry and reminds you how wise Craven was to steer clear of that side of the story.

Horror remakes can work. I just belatedly caught up with Breck Eisner's shockingly well-made take on George Romero's The Crazies and was reminded that sometimes stories are indeed worth retelling, so long as you have the talent to pull it off and a strong point of view on the material. A Nightmare on Elm Street has nothing of the sort. These people should all be ashamed of themselves. ×××

Date Night ★★ As the writing in TV comedies grows more sophisticated and edgy, its big-screen competition keeps sliding backward. Proof of this sad fact, director Shawn Levy's latest strands Steve Carell and Tina Fey, two of TV's smartest, funniest performers/writers, in a tedious slog that feels so much like one of those 1980s Touchstone Pictures remakes of French farces, it probably should've starred Steve Guttenberg and Shelley Long. Playing a boring New Jersey couple who steal a reservation at a trendy Manhattan eatery, Carell and Fey end up involved in a convoluted mistaken-identity scenario that leaves them on the run from crooked cops and Ray Liotta's spaghetti-slurping Mafioso. The two stars ad-lib as hard as they can, assisted by a sly, self-mocking supporting turn from Mark Wahlberg. But there's no escaping the fundamental lameness of Josh Klausner's screenplay, and Levy seems to think we've come to a Carell and Fey vehicle for the car chases. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Ghost Writer ★★★ ½ It's not my job to weigh in on Roman Polanski's personal issues. Sure, I'd never let him within a mile of my underage cousins, but The Ghost Writer is such a superlative example of craftsmanship that I walked out of the theater on a cloud. Adapted from Robert Harris' novel, this is a humdrum potboiler polished to a very fine sheen. Ewan McGregor gives his least-offensive performance in years as a hack writer assigned to wrestle the unwieldy memoirs of a transparent Tony Blair stand-in (strikingly well-played by Pierce Brosnan) into something publishable. What matters isn't the plot but the air of malevolence that Polanski brings to every seemingly innocuous conversation. He creates suspense without cutting, positioning the camera slightly off-axis for long takes that induce a sense of overwhelming dread. There's a casual elegance to these compositions, and Polanski displays an old-school command of the medium. Not a great story, but they just don't make 'em like this anymore. (At Kendall Square, Waltham Embassy and in the suburbs.)

The Good, the Bad, the Weird ★★★ Sergio Leone's 1960s spaghetti westerns filtered old cowboy tropes through the prism of Akira Kurosowa's samurai epics. So I guess it makes generational sense that Kim Ji-woon's "kimchi western" dumps a lot more influences into the archetypal Cuisinart, puréeing everything from chop-socky cheapies to The Road Warrior in a gargantuan, cheerfully anachronistic romp. Overlong and overplotted, it's entirely too much of a good thing. Substituting Leone's Civil War backdrop with 1930s Manchuria, the film borrows its namesake's structure of pitting three bad-asses at cross-purposes in search of buried treasure. The mashup of divergent music cues, corkscrew camera-moves and escalating chaos eventually grows tiring. A final desert chase pitting a Japanese army on horses against a gang of hooligans on motorcycles left me as exhausted as I was impressed. Sadly, nothing in The Good, the Bad, the Weird lingers with the mythic resonance of the films it references. But surface-level pleasures are still pleasures, right? (At Kendall Square.)

Green Zone ★★ Director Paul Greengrass alternates between harrowing docudramas like Bloody Sunday or United 93 and the whip-smart, blockbuster satisfactions of his Jason Bourne sequels. Teaming with his muse, Matt Damon, Greengrass attempts to merge the two forms with this propulsive action-adventure loosely based on Rajiv Chandrasekaran's nonfiction best seller, Imperial Life in the Emerald City. Set in Baghdad during the summer of 2003, Green Zone stars Damon as a no-nonsense grunt who's shocked to discover that there are no weapons of mass destruction. The problem here is that Greengrass' two skill-sets cancel each other out, as his knack for packing the jittery frames with verisimilitude is drowned out by the dopey demands of Brian Helgeland's crowd-pleasing screenplay. The quagmire in Iraq is too complex a scenario to serve as backdrop for composite villains and pat resolutions. Damon is terrific, as always, and Greengrass crafts some suspenseful set-pieces, but the fictional happy ending is an insult. (In the suburbs.)

Greenberg ★★★ ½ That person you wanted to be in your 20s is embarrassing at age 40. Writer-director Noah Baumbach, who helmed such cringe-fests as The Squid and the Whale and Margot at the Wedding, hits squirm-overdrive with this tale of a maladjusted rebel house-sitting in L.A. while his brother's family tours Vietnam. Adrift in poolside ennui, Ben Stiller's Roger Greenberg seethes and insults according to ancient reflexes, alienating those around him for maximum discomfort. He doesn't understand adult notions of compromise and turns all his interior self-loathing and disappointment outward against the world. His character is unbearable, but the attitude comes from someplace genuinely painful. Only his brother's hapless 20-something assistant, played brilliantly by the bewitching Greta Gerwig, can break through Greenberg's armor of sarcastic aggression. She's too good for him, but you'll root for them to get together all the same. (At Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square amd Waltham Embassy.)

How to Train Your Dragon ★★★ This is an unusually adorable CGI adventure from DreamWorks Animation, best known for the noxious Shrek series. Jay Baruchel voices a stumblebum Viking named Hiccup who aches to befriend dragons instead of slay them. Much to the chagrin of his Hagar the Horrible–looking dad (Gerard Butler, in his first tolerable movie), our young hero spends the bulk of the film cozying up to a moody creature nicknamed Toothless and teaching kids a valuable lesson about kindness conquering aggression. The story is a familiar one, with echoes of Avatar during the vertiginous 3-D flying sequences. But the movie is disarmingly sweet and strikingly well-crafted. Directors Dean DeBlois and Chris Sanders were responsible for Disney's charming 2002 oddity Lilo & Stitch. This one doesn't feel quite as fresh, but it gets the job done with rousing action sequences and a great orchestral score by John Powell. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Kick-Ass ★★★ The superhero movie for people who are sick of superhero movies, Matthew Vaughn's latest is a rude blast of rancid attitude and giddy, remorseless violence. This has some critics outraged, but Kick-Ass strikes me as entirely too silly to be cause for alarm. It's just a hell of a lot of fun, giving a well-deserved wedgie to Hollywood's recent glut of solemn, costumed avenger epics. Aaron Johnson plays the title character, a dorky teenage fanboy fed up with the world's injustices who takes to the streets attempting to fight crime. But lurking in the shadows are Big Daddy (Nicolas Cage) and Hit-Girl (Chloe Grace Moretz), a brutally efficient father-daughter team of bloodthirsty vigilantes. He walks around in a Batman costume; she's 11. At almost two hours, the film feels a bit windy. And yet the over-the-top finale is so boisterous, kinetic and just plain wrong that I laughed. God help me, I laughed. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

A Prophet ★★★ ½ A best foreign-language film Oscar nominee, Jacques Audiard's entertaining gangster epic is a story about pluck and ingenuity working in all the wrong ways. Tahar Rahim stars as Malik El Djebena, a helpless young man who enters jail as an illiterate thug, only to blossom into a modern-day Michael Corleone over the span of six years. Savagely beaten on his arrival and bullied into a murder by a ruthless gang of elderly Corsicans, El Djebena quietly assimilates to prison life and works every setback to his own Machiavellian advantage. Audiard slyly comments on France's changing racial landscape, as the old-school Corsicans ruling the roost gradually find themselves outnumbered by their Arab counterparts. The diminishment of entrenched power opens up a world of opportunity for the ever-alert protagonist, and Rahim's remarkable performance expands as his character's confidence grows. El Djebena manipulates gangs and plots against one another in a cunning chess match, with amoral, crowd-pleasing results. (In the suburbs.)

The Runaways ★★ ½ Dakota Fanning is all grown up. In case you had any doubt, director Floria Sigismondi's cheerfully trashy biopic about the 1970s girl group begins with a shot of Fanning's menstrual blood hitting the pavement on the Sunset Strip. Charting the rise and fall of these queens of noise by studiously embracing every stale cliché from every rock 'n' roll movie ever made, The Runaways is more of a kick than it has a right to be. There's an agreeable, lurid energy, as Sigismondi fully embraces the female empowerment/leering-at-jailbait contradictions that made the band such a sensation... at least in Japan. Fanning vamps it up as Cherie Currie, the original riot grrl who couldn't handle the drugs and adulation. Michael Shannon steals scenes as abusive manager Kim Fowley. But the movie belongs to Kristen Stewart's Joan Jett. Nailing Jett's hunched strut and snarled delivery, Stewart adds a layer of vulnerability. Add an extra star if you enjoy seeing teenage girls in their underwear. (At Waltham Embassy.)

Shutter Island ★★★ ½ Martin Scorsese's latest is a work of malevolent ambience that works in spite of the occasionally lame story it's trying to tell. This is a Technicolor phantasmagoria seen almost exclusively through the point of view of its tormented, guilt-ridden antihero. Leonardo DiCaprio's federal marshal Teddy Daniels arrives on a hyperbolically forbidding island in Boston Harbor to investigate the abrupt disappearance of a mental patient at a hospital where rumors of mind-control experiments run rampant. It's an exercise in style, with a brilliant filmmaker flexing his muscles on inferior material. Scorsese telegraphs "the twist" in the opening moments, asking the audience to see the film as something scarier and more substantial than the simple narrative trick pulled in Dennis Lehane's novel. The earlier you figure out the "surprise" ending, the more rewarding the movie becomes as a portrait of denial and self-hatred. (In the suburbs.)

Sharon Jones & the Dap-Kings play House of Blues on May 27.

From studio to stage, Sharon Jones & the Dap-Kings recast vintage soul vibes.

MOTHER NATURE has thrown curves at Sharon Jones & the Dap-Kings' spring schedule—from the volcanic cloud that stranded the soul-funk outfit in Europe to the threat of Texas tornadoes. "One thing after another, man," bandleader Gabriel Roth says. "Just acts of God."

Luckily, Roth and his gang know how to weather storms on their own terms. The bassist/producer went into debt launching a previous label devoted to old-school soul before Daptone Records became a solid venture. And the Dap-Kings went on to record with Amy Winehouse (for her Grammy-winning album Back to Black) as well as Jones, a onetime prison guard who's her own force of nature.

"Sharon is a dynamo, and everything about her is real," Roth, 35, says of the 54-year-old frontwoman. She first caught his ear as a backup singer at his previous label Desco and shared his love for Aretha Franklin and James Brown. "She really has a lot of power to move people."

Jones, who was coincidently born in Brown's hometown of Augusta, Ga., will get the chance to move the crowd when the Dap-Kings hit House of Blues on May 27, then swing back to the Newport Folk Festival on Aug. 1.

The singer also perfectly complements Roth's analog aesthetic. He prefers vintage equipment like the Ampex eight-track tape machine he used to record the decade-seasoned group's fourth album, I Learned the Hard Way.

"There's nothing old about it," Roth says of the nine-piece band's sheer sound. "It's very contemporary in a lot of ways, more live and spontaneous than anything you hear on the radio these days.... People are tired of records made on computers and artists that aren't completely singing."

"It's more live and spontaneous than anything you hear on the radio these days."

He explains how digital recording offers the freedom to retune or reorganize music after the initial recording. "The problem with that is it allows a lot of people the freedom to underperform," says Roth (aka Bosco Mann), noting that eight-track forces a musician to erase a previous take to attempt a better one. "That puts him in a different frame of mind. That puts goose bumps on his neck and makes him play with heart, with balls."

Roth also cites a hands-on difference, reminiscent of how he and his crew built Daptone's Brooklyn studio House of Soul by hand after they lost $40,000 to a bankrupt distribution broker. "If you have a tape machine, it breaks in a finite way, a fixable way," he says. "If you have a computer and it crashes, the music's gone."

Besides, Roth adds during a Late Night with Jimmy Fallon rehearsal break, "I prefer the sound of tape."

British producer Mark Ronson agreed with the results. He hired the Dap-Kings to record with Amy Winehouse on tracks including "Rehab" and "You Know I'm No Good" at House of Soul. The band then backed the volatile singer on her subsequent U.S. tour. "She would always thank me after every show," Roth says. "She was cool to work with, and she's a real good songwriter."

The opportunity boosted the Dap-Kings' profile, but more with the industry than the public, he says. "We have a very organic way that we built our following," says Roth, who's the band's primary songwriter. "The sky is falling if you ask anyone at the major record labels. But for us, we've had very steady growth—of audiences and record sales and notoriety."

Indeed, beyond records and extracurricular activities (Jones recently sang backup with Phish for its Halloween rendition of the Rolling Stones' Exile on Main Street), Sharon Jones & the Dap-Kings' calling card is their own vibrant live sets.

"The good shows—when they really get boiling—just feel like a bunch of people in the room together, making something happen," Roth says. "Everybody's sweating and dancing, and it becomes very electric—very much like a church kind of thing. It's a wild experience. That feeling is really the number-one reason that we've been able to be so successful." ✖✖✖

Bo's Show

Burnham Would

Nineteen-year-old Bo Burnham has come a long way from the bedroom in his parents' Hamilton house where his career in comedy music began. It all started as a YouTube video of him stringing together a series of politically incorrect, raunchy and offensive rhymes over a plunky piano tune. Since then, not much has changed except that he puts on pants before hitting the stage. Catch him at House of Blues on May 21. Tom Samph

IMPROPER Sightings!

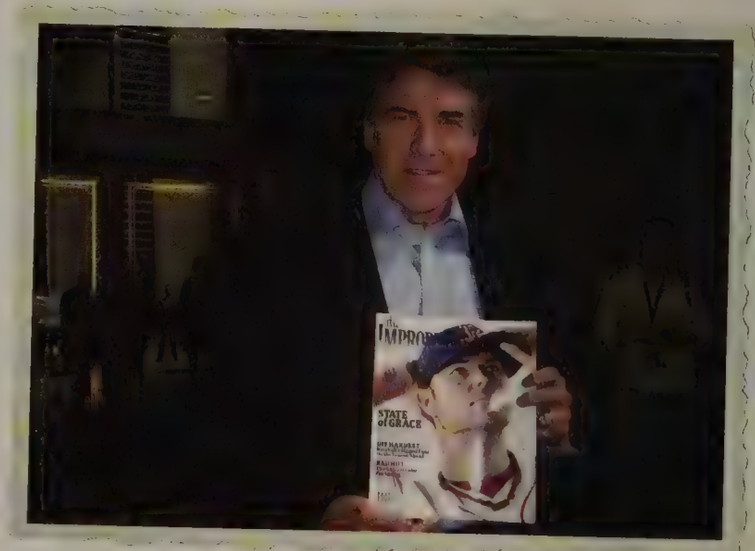
ATTENTION, BOUNTY HUNTERS! BONUS POINTS TO ANYONE WHO CAN CAPTURE AN IMPROPER READER RUNNING IN CIRCLES AT THE "MIKE THE HEADLESS CHICKEN" FESTIVAL, HELD MAY 14–15 IN FRUITA, COLO.

Unlike the rest of your friends, we want to see the photos from your next trip. Where did you take us? Send us a picture of you or a buddy, or better yet, someone famous reading THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN and tell us where you were. The wilder your destination and the more creative your photo, the better your chances of making the cut in the esteemed IMPROPER Sightings.



Ken Murphy took us to Chad, which—along with the nations of Hunter, Spencer and Preston—belongs to the bloc of African preppy-name states.

On a windy day at North and South Korea's demilitarized zone, Alisa Jordan's copy of "The Improper" blew across the border and was sentenced to 12 years of hard labor.

Shelby Kirsch went to Versailles, France—famed throughout the world for its magnificent gravel collection.

Texas governor Rick Perry maintained his composure when he received an angelic visit from a very shiny Jon Lester.

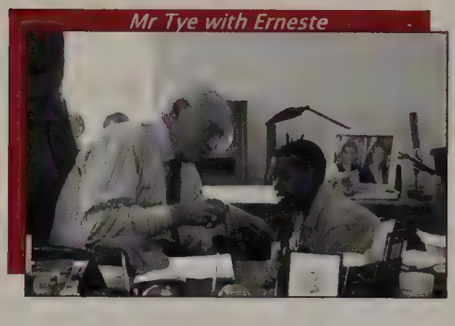
WE WILL NEVER STOP CARING



A LETTER FROM RWANDA

You have a nice welcome note when someone searches for your Foundation. It says

WE NEVER STOP CARING! WHEN YOU SAVE A LIFE YOU SAVE THE FUTURE.

Allow me to congratulate for this mission because you put it in practice, you do not only say it. Today, my objective is to thank you so much for paying my heart surgery.

Mr Tye with Erneste

I would like to be a doctor when I grow up and help other as you helped me. I wish to be a cardiologist, and I will like to come back to the United States for my college education.

I thank you once again for helping me and my God already blessed you.

Thanks.
Erneste.

Dear Erneste,

Thank you for your beautiful note.

YOU ARE THE FUTURE.

I hope that as you grow up you realize that helping someone else is the greatest mission you can have.

God bless you,

Ray Tye

Last Scene Here { JONATHAN SOROFF }

IN THE LONG RUN

Going Whole Slog

Not to be a buzz-kill or anything, but running 26.2 miles is no big whoop. What's way more of a marathon is all the parties, and I'd like to brag on the record that I won the very first Boston Marathon Party Ironman Triathlon (not officially sanctioned by the Boston Athletic Association, and probably not approved by my cardiologist).

I had to prove to myself I could do it, though: Five parties, on opposite sides of Boylston Street, right at the finish line—the most densely packed concentration of drunks-with-the-day-off and skinny-people-wrapped-in-mylar-blankets known to man.

My personal Hopkinton was the ballroom of the Mandarin Oriental, Boston, which was packed with people grazing at elaborate buffets and occasionally glancing toward the windows, like Romans feasting at a gladiator match. There were two very official-looking men in full military regalia (either that, or the Sgt. Pepper look is back and no one told me). There was the smallest person I've ever met in a hotel ballroom: Asher Mezrich, chilling in a pimped-out stroller being pushed by his proud parents, the stupidly talented novelist Ben and yummy mummy Tonya. There was even, in the hallway, Elisha Daniels, who wasn't really at the party but needed to get from Saks Fifth Avenue to Gucci, and nothing—come hell or high-water—gets between that woman and shopping.

I was already winded when I braved the sidewalk, plastering myself against the wall and inching along toward the Lenox Hotel, to the Saunders family's annual party. I said hello to as many of them as I could find. Todd was there. Tedd had a cold. Amanda proved that she's a 10th-grade fashion icon. There were also people like Dick and Hilary Glovsky, and Marci Duarte and Gina Fox. The one person I couldn't find: Evan Saunders, who had already been to the party and was back home in Brookline. One person I was shocked to find there: Ryan McCourt, whose family's foundation was hosting a party across the street—my next stop.

Like Trojan heroes, he and I led a contingent including his babe-a-licous girlfriend, Charity Chamillard, and red-headed siren Ashley Connors on the long slog through the congested, trash-strewn, cordoned-off streets, down to Arlington, over to Newbury and back to Boylston, to the Charlesmark Hotel, where Ryan was greeted like the McCourt jester he is, by family and the likes of pretty boy Billy Meara.

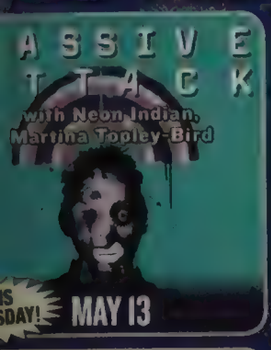
It was packed with people grazing at elaborate buffets, like Romans feasting at a gladiator match.



A few bourbons later, it was time to stop at Marlo Fogelman's party (which wins for best view of the finish line, not that I cared much at that point). While downing a 'Gansett tall-boy, I chatted with Biggest Loser contestant Ali Vincent and assorted, blurry others, before stumbling the homestretch of a few doors down to the abode of Phil and Julie Gordon. They were hosting a party in honor of our friend Jayme Fink, who ran to raise money for Combined Jewish Philanthropies. It was an especially sweet finish to a grueling day, and lest you think I was legless at this point (and I was), I was still sober enough to notice that the smokin'-hot Jill Skolnick was rockin' the same killer white coat that Amanda Saunders had been wearing. If that's not enough to earn me a laurel wreath, I don't know what is. ✖✖✖

Fair-Weather Fashion

In cities with interminable winters, summer's arrival can cause locals to go a little loco, making bad decisions, fashion and otherwise. I spent two years in Chicago, where the first warm day, for more than a few people, means an excuse to stroll downtown in their swimsuits. This might be acceptable in Miami, but not in the Midwest, a place that confuses a lake for a beach.

Even in Boston, with our easy access to the sea, clothing seems to go awry around 60 degrees. I start wearing flip-flops on Easter weekend, regardless of the weather. And I'm not alone. To style us in a better direction, we have new fashion editor Noria Morales, previously of Lucky. In this issue, she updates seasonal staples, from shorts to swimsuits, which, however chic, should stay in close proximity to water.

Who Likes Short Shorts?

PANTS FEVER

FASHION MUST EVOLVE. Yesterday's culottes are today's distressed jeans. And so shorts — once the provenance of bunny-nosed schoolboys — are suddenly acceptable office wear. Pleated shorts, longer shorts, shorts with cuffs. I would wear," says Martha Fallinger, co-owner of Dress. "Especially with a closed-toe shoe." At Beacon Hill's Crush Boutique, co-owner Laura Macus recommends the Imperatives short with inside tie pictured above. "We've seen a lot of khaki- and nautical-inspired ones," in accord with the current taste for an "undone" look for the workplace, though, she says. Opt for a longer length, and opt for black or navy. — ANDREW RIMAS

Boston Market may have brought rotisserie chicken to the masses, but the Hub is home to a far more flavorful bird. Peruvian pollo a la brasa—charcoal-fired to perfection at this East Boston–based business—boasts juicy, super-seasoned meat. Just like the fast-food chain, platters come with two sides: a fried starch (tostones, please) and an iceberg salad, plus aji-chili sauce that's finger-lickin' good. ELIZABETH BOMZE

A Strong Finish

A chipped manicure can feel like money down the drain, but if the alternative is acrylics, I'd rather flush a one-hundred-dollar bill. Leave it to OPI to find a happy medium with its Axxium gel polish, now available at SalonCapri. Available in some 30 shades (including favorites like Bubble Bath and Passion), the polish goes on with a brush that's dipped into a small pot of paint. During the 35–45 minute process, several coats of base, color and sealer are applied and hardened with a UV light. The results last a solid three weeks, meaning no more beach-damaged nails this summer. AMANDA KNORR

Going Out

Big Game

For years, our eyes were trained on Fort Point as Boston's up-and-coming 'hood, but quietly, the Fenway Triangle has taken definitive steps forward. Last month saw the openings of Jerry Remy's and Fenway Cantina. A Puma City is in the works, along with a restaurant from the Franklin Café team. Their neighbor at 1330 Boylston St. is Basho, touting itself as a Japanese brasserie.

"This is one of the few pieces of the city that's revamping," says owner Jack Huang, also of Back Bay's Douzo. "It's got the most diversity that you're going to find."

Tucked into the hollow between the colleges, hospitals and regular waves of Fenway faithful, Basho hopes to please all comers with seating for 250 and another 50 outdoors. The varied dining areas, including a sushi bar, feature some French-inspired tastes, like snow-crab cream croquet ($11) and foie-gras teriyaki ($15), but that influence is more of a whisper than a directive. Asserts Huang, "Our focus is still modern Japanese food. It's the space and the atmosphere that's more brasserie."

Items from the robata grill and "Basho flavored" creations—like tuna kimchi sashimi ($14.75) and cured saba sushi ($3.50) with crunchy mushroom and apple-mustard soy—represent a more signature style. It's all part of an extensive menu aimed at feeding an expanding area of the city.

MAKING NEW WAVES

The Jersey Shore has nothing on Marina Bay.

HOPING FOR A HUGE splash just outside Boston, Frank dePasquale and Nick Varano are opening New England's largest outdoor nightclub, accommodating 1,600 revelers, this Memorial Day weekend. The Ocean Club at Marina Bay, formerly known as the Marina Bay Beach Club and Waterworks, will boast live entertainment, four full bars, a professional volleyball court, billiards and a "gourmet food court," featuring upscale versions of backyard barbecue fare, such as Kobe beef hot dogs. The concept of a "gourmet food court" may sound questionable, but remember, this is in the hands of dePasquale (who owns a half-dozen North End hot spots, including Mare and Bricco) and Varano (owner of Strega and Nico).

MAX BRENNER "Chocolate by the Bald Man" debuts this fall in the Back Bay. Expect the same over-the-top menu served at the New York location. At brunch, fans may or may not want a bagel stuffed with milk chocolate and hazelnut cream but should be intrigued by "illegal chocolate chocolate chocolate pancakes." Among the sweet-savory pairings are Vidalia onion rings with dark-chocolate ranch dressing and waffle fries dusted with chili and cocoa powder.

GOODBYE, GREZZO. Owner Alissa Cohen closed her raw-food restaurants in the North End and in Newburyport after writing in her blog that she was "burned out."

WATCH FOR Jason Santos of Gargoyles on the Square on Hell's Kitchen, premiering on June 1. Also competing is Sel de la Terre's Ben Knack.

FUSED TOGETHER Shanghai Sunset and Mandarinquat Mojito

Drink of the Moment

SPLICE IS NICE

The temperatures have started rising, and as drinkers hit the patios, bartenders are marching into the kitchen. Seasonal produce is popping up on cocktail menus around the area—from peaches in Green Street's Georgia mint julep to Summer Winter's watermelon basil squeeze.

In on the act, Dbar offers two cocktails featuring the citrus mutt known as the mandarinquat. "Lots of hybrid fruit is becoming available, and we thought it could be interesting," bartender Zack Grenier says. "It's a lot sweeter than an orange or a kumquat. Even the rind itself is sweeter."

The evidence is in the infusion. After a week's soak in vodka, the result is a nectar that could stand proudly on its own. The addition of muddled orange and ginger, as in the SHANGHAI SUNSET ($8.50), doesn't hurt. "Ginger is used well to cut fat, like a sauvignon blanc would cut the fat in fish," Grenier explains. Sit outside, and try one with the spring salad with avocado dressing ($10).

Then there's the MANDARINQUAT MOJITO ($9), in which heaps of mint and thyme accompany the vodka. It's 2008's hot cocktail reimagined, thanks to a creative combination of fruits.

Burn Notice

The latest from the henhouse? Pete Lowy and Jen Hashley, known for their just-laid eggs and backyard-raised chickens, have a new product for sale at their tiny barn market behind Verrill Farm. Neither protein nor poultry, the hot sauce is sourced from friend and former staffer Jess Myles. The fiery condiment, which Myles concocted from her own crop of habañero, cayenne and jalapeno chilies, packs a tangy punch. It also makes a fine topping on hard-boiled eggs. ELIZABETH BOMZE

UMBER PARTY

Nick tans his hide.

I OFFICIALLY RETIRED FROM THE sun last spring. For safety's sake, I decided I'd had my share of tans. I'd had my burns, and it was time to embrace a life of permanent French vanilla.

My girlfriend decided she wanted to see something in a russet or raw sienna.

The impetus was the curiosity of her friend Kate, whose skin tone would be the envy of all social circles, were these medieval times. She wants to live life in the Bronze Age, but when the summer comes, heredity has her slathering on SPF 85. That's a level of protection I didn't know existed until we found ourselves chatting in a waiting room, mentally preparing for $40 spray tans. We were at Perfect Tan, a location chosen both for its reputation and immediate availability, giving me no chance to weasel out.

I can't say my pale arm was twisted, but my girlfriend was definitely the driving force, and, as she tagged along to see the show, I began to suspect her motive was more about comedy than cosmetics. "Please go aggressive with it," she half demanded, before digging through the tan-line stickers. I looked to Kate, who was filling out the release.

"Are you allergic to sunlight?" "Well, sometimes I feel sick if I'm out in the sun for a while." She paused. "I'll check in the middle."

There was no help to be found.

Surprisingly, I found the process itself rather enjoyable. Once you've stripped down to your briefs, you step into what looks like a giant, futuristic phone booth, and a bizarre game of Simon Says begins. Through a variety of poses, an attendant sprays all your nooks and angles with two coats of a mixture containing dihydroxyacetone. DHA interacts with the acids in dead skin cells, turning them brown, and has no proven toxicity. (Sure, it may be a chemical developed by German scientists before World War II, but seriously, don't sweat it.) Finally, with the what-the-hell attitude of a dieter ordering dessert, I opted for an additional third coat, then stepped out in front of a mirror and laughed my ass off.

Things were less funny the next day. With bronzer coating my skin and setting off a panic in my mind, I looked like something that had crawled out of a used cigarette filter. But as the additives circled the shower drain, the angst faded a bit, and I figured that, like a drastically new haircut, this was something I'd have to own if it was going to work.

And like a new 'do, there are pluses and minuses, a fact made clear when my coworker Andrew came by with his normal morning greeting. "Hey, how'd the—OH MY DEAR GOD."

Not a huge shot of confidence. Continuing the haircut analogy, there's no way to hide the fact you've just been spray-tanned, and I imagine he'd have found a mohawk less shocking. Initially more charitable, our assistant editor remarked, "If you told me you just got back from vacation, I'd say, 'Sure.'" She then added, "Because I wouldn't guess, based on the way you dress, that'd you'd go tanning." Thanks?

Day two brought drastic changes, as my new hue, hiding in plain sight, became invisible. In fact, people accused me off scrubbing off the results, but a quick shot of the tan lines silenced any doubters. And though, with my face to my forearms painted one uniform shade, things didn't look fully natural—I felt more dirty then tan—I began to embrace the positives. Muscles pop. Skin (incorrectly) appears healthier. An approximation of the superficial look you want can be had then forgotten over the course of a week.

Kate's boyfriend, Matt, summed up the situation best. On day two he was relieved to see that the "Lindsay Lohan glow" had faded. By day five, he'd moved onto more important matters. "When I was in high school, no one ever mentioned you could make money spraying down naked women."

As for my tan, only the eroded scraps remain. And I miss it like a sucked-down strawberry daiquiri. It's a summer treat I feel slightly ridiculous enjoying. But when it comes time to hit the beach this year, though I may not always be comfortable in my skin, I resolve to be comfortable with my shade. ✖✖✖

DRIVEN MAD

TO THE GUILTY DRIVER: I guess you felt that by yelling obscenities you could ameliorate your guilt. You fail. I was halfway through a crosswalk off Harvard Square (one in which there is never a right of way for cars). It was well lit; there were many pedestrians. You slowly started to turn, and you almost hit me. Then you yelled, "Oh my God... get off your fing phone!" I ignored you. I was talking to someone more important than you. My sick father did not need to hear me yell back. No need for profanity… your presence in the world is disgusting enough. It saddens me to be reminded of why pedestrians hate drivers. I am writing to let you know that you fail at being a good person. Good people—no matter if they spend the rest of their lives working toward social justice—do not swear at strangers after almost driving them over. Happy to be alive

To the inbound Copley Station Metro man:

Every morning you greet exiting Green Line commuters at Copley Station with a brimming, genuine smile. You make people like me grateful that people like you exist! The first words I hear each morning are a friendly, "Hello, gorgeous! And how are you today?" Today you said to me, "Beautiful, you make my life beautiful!" You never fail to make me smile, and no matter how rough my week has been, I can always count on you to begin my day happy and bright. You ask for nothing in return. If we all treated each other with the same [warmth] and sincerity as you do, this world would be a better place.

OH, MAN

A museum curator bites the dust.

MUSEUM OF MAN DIRECTOR Norman de Ratour finds himself in a sticky spot when the body of the pompously named Heinrich von Grümh, an honorary curator, turns up. The gun belongs to Norman. In this labyrinthine mystery, sparkling with urbane wit, the "who" in the "dunnit" waxes and relaxes as museum characters strut their academic narcissism and their struggles for power. One woman, formerly a man, is so obsessed with victimization, and her exhibits highlighting it, that she doesn't recognize her own humorless control issues. Another wants to make the museum into a mausoleum, a hereafter destination for the rich dead.

Regarding the murder, Norman's wife had a brief affair with the deceased, and Norman—half-lackadaisically—thinks he may even have killed the guy. But the most arresting character is Alphus, a chimpanzee who's been scientifically enhanced to near-humanhood; he can type and do sign language. As Norman's sidekick, he's a wry bystander, almost a philosopher, and an observant sleuth of the murder mystery. As suspects are interviewed, this chimp's uncanny moral radar catches the nuances, which he dutifully delivers to Norman. ✖✖✖

The Counterfeit Murder in the Museum of Man by Alfred Alcorn

"When I noticed him carefully wrapping a bottle of expensive single-malt Scotch, I looked quizzically at Millicent. But she just shrugged. I won't deny I found it unsettling to have a chimpanzee sitting next to me in my ancient Renault with his seat belt buckled on."

THE RENAISSANCE

Anthony Mazzotta and the new Lucca make a fine pairing.

TOUR OF ITALY Charles Draghi enjoys Lucca's diverse flavors.

CHARLES DRAGHI ONLY HAD eyes for the wine. We'd been seated at Lucca Back Bay for 30 minutes before he even glanced at the menu. "There are some really nice bottles on here," said Draghi, chef and co-owner of Erbaluce. "Some good thought went into this."

From the team behind Lucca in the North End, this new location was once the home of Ambrosia, where Draghi worked briefly in the '90s. Having seen a couple iterations since then—including the owners' previous concept, Sasso—the space has been notably improved with a muted Mediterranean decor.

But back to the wine. As a teenager, Draghi had a boss who advised, "There's no point in spending the next 30 years working 100 hours a week making perfect dishes if your staff is going to serve wines that make it all taste horrible." Draghi took heed, and after cooking around New York and Boston (Marcuccio's, Tangiers, L'Espalier), he spent five years as a server at No. 9 Park strengthening his wine knowledge.

Trusting him with our drink order, I turned to the food, only to relinquish control of that, too. Draghi was eager to put his faith in a tasting menu prepared by chef Anthony Mazzotta, formerly at the French Laundry and Per Se under Thomas Keller, as well as Ken Oringer's Toro.

I wasn't about to argue.

Draghi gave our attentive server the marching orders: two glasses of St. Michael-Eppan pinot bianco ($9) followed by a bottle of Coppo Barbera D'asti ($65). Our journey was under way.

We began on the South Shore with ostriche ($16), an Island Creek oyster marinated in bacon, lemon juice and truffle oil then topped with crumbled bacon. "All that bacon-y, smoky, truffle-y goes really well with the pinot bianco," Draghi opined, after a deep inhale of the wine. "Reminds me of a cookout on the beach."

With the first stage done, he confessed his love for the personality of a tasting menu. "Guests from my Marcuccio's days will come to Erbaluce and say, 'Chuck knows what I like.'" Mazzotta also got into the spirit, sending out vitello tonnato ($16). His take involved a paper-thin slice of veal topped with tuna tartare and pickled ramps.

"Cheeky," Draghi said with a laugh. "Very deconstructed."

Also deconstructed was the insalata alla Romana ($11), a variation on a Caesar salad with romaine, white anchovy, pickled shallot and a parmesan emulsion speared together beside a creamy deviled egg. The Italian authenticity was debatable, Draghi argued, noting the cheese paired with fish. We gobbled it up.

Two skillets then arrived filled with sautéed calamari and spring-onion agrodolce ($13). "See, this smells very Italian to me. Ocean-y, kind of herbal," he described, before dunking a slice of grilled bread into the sauce.

We were onto the bottle of Coppo, which Draghi sipped after each bite. The wine stood up wonderfully to a black-peppercorn gnocchi ($13) tossed with creamy morels, pickled ramps, bacon and spinach.

The cappesante ($36) came next: a Georges Bank diver scallop over marinated fiddleheads and eggplant with soy beans and a dash of pistachio vinaigrette. Would our acidic red work with the fish? "Well-made wine will go with anything," my date explained.

"My big thing is balance," Draghi continued after a few bites of the striped bass special (market price), accompanied by sunchokes. "A little acidity, a little sweetness. Everything is about how fresh the bass is."

We muscled through a veal and veal cheek duetto ($36) before turning to our sweet finale: a malted banana milkshake, a chocolate semi-frozen parfait and a goat-cheese cheesecake ($10 each).

Draghi took a bite of each before returning to the wine. "See? A wine like this? Still goes perfectly with dessert," he beamed. "It carries all the way through." ×××

SET THE STAGE

The Huntington Theatre Company held its annual "Spotlight Spectacular" at the Sheraton Boston Hotel on April 25. The dinner, auction and performance was cochaired by event planner Bryan Rafanelli and Huntington trustee Carol Deane. Some 350 people attended and raised $625,000.

One of Boston's oldest charities, the Vincent Club was founded in 1892 to support the Vincent Memorial Hospital, now the obstetrics and gynecology division at Massachusetts General Hospital. More than 250 people gathered on April 27 at the Harvard Club for an annual fund-raising luncheon. The event raised $150,000.

ABOUT FACE

Let the mass exodus begin.

MY FRIEND BRAXTON was the first person I knew who joined Facebook. The other day, he sent an e-mail announcing that he's also the first person to quit. "You may have noticed that I have shut down my Facebook account," he began. "Please don't take this as me not wanting to stay in touch with any of you. I definitely do, and you have my e-mail and phone number, of course. But Facebook was just getting out of control." And so it begins. Allow me to pose a huge question based on thin anecdotal evidence: Is Facebook dead?

Answer: maybe. Inane status updates are one thing, Braxton explained, but the creepy leveraging of your personal information is quite another. "You mention that you're getting married in a message to a friend, and suddenly wedding cake companies know about it and are advertising on your web page."

Wait, so companies can scan your Facebook conversation topics to send you ads? Because if that's the case, I'm going to start a couple of businesses called Immigrants Are Ruining the Country, and No They're Not, Glenn Beck Is. I don't know what they'll sell, but based on the daily arguments on Facebook, a lot of people would see ads for my wares. Which, now that I think about it, will be T-shirts that read, "Volcanos Are Major Ash Holes." Then when Eyejackafrack erupts again, I'll be rich.

Because, according to my estimates, 90 percent of Facebook is now devoted to pointless political bickering. For instance, I have two friends who've known each other for years. She's conservative. He's liberal. After a Facebook blowout, they no longer speak to each other. For the longest time, neither of them knew or cared about the other's political leanings. But with Facebook, it's like walking around with a bumper sticker on your forehead. And whatever that bumper sticker says, it'll lead half your friends to conclude that you're a moron and the other half to cheer your preexisting opinions. I suppose you could simply refrain from commenting on political issues, but then how will the morons know how moronic they are and the correct people know how correct they are?

Facebook is the tedious airline companion of the Internet, chatting your ear off all the way across the country.

I try to stay out of Facebook brawls, but I did go through a phase when I was pretty heavy into the 'Book. I changed my profile photo more than once every six months. I became a fan of something or other. I posted a mobile update. But I realized I was starting to suffer Facebook burnout during the Kentucky Derby. The horses were heading to the gate, and a graphic showed each horse's lifetime winnings. I thought, "Man, I hate when a horse has made more money in its lifetime than I have in mine." Then I thought, "Hey, there's a status update!" But then I thought, "Well, who cares, really?" Which neatly sums up most of what's on Facebook.

Facebook must know it needs to figure out some new angles, because it's getting more ambitious all the time. It recently asked me, "Hey, do you mind if I go into your phone and take a stab at assigning photos to your contacts?" And I said, "Sure, Facebook, you hardly ever screw up—knock yourself out!" Now, when my brother-in-law, Rick, calls me, my phone shows the Facebook profile photo of a high-school friend named Rick. In the technology business, this is what we call Rick Synergy, and Apple and Facebook have finally made it work.

Letting Facebook get its tentacles into my phone is just one privacy issue, among many. Last week, someone I know used Facebook to find photos of another friend's new girlfriend, to prove that she was recently at a party making out with some other guy. OK, maybe they weren't my friends. Maybe they were Pam and Michael on The Office. But they feel like my friends when I welcome them into my home each Thursday night, those rascals. The point is, stop tagging me in photos. Or at least, stick to the ones where I'm conscious and wearing pants. If you can find any.

At this point, I'm ambivalent about Facebook. We've seen this trajectory before, most recently with MySpace—initial enthusiasm, rapid adoption by everyone you know, then growing disillusionment. But at least MySpace was seedy and porn-infested. Facebook is the tedious airline companion of the Internet, chatting your ear off all the way across the country. But I'm not ready to quit. Not because I care that you're tired today or that you have some new imaginary farm animals, but because I don't want to end up like Braxton, opting out of Facebook only to have everyone make rude Amish jokes about me. Jokes that I wouldn't even know about until they're mentioned in a magazine column. Seeing as they're all posted on Facebook. ✖✖✖

SINKING FEELING

It's almost time to panic.

I'VE OFFICIALLY UNVEILED THE panic button. In the Theo Epstein era, this is a record. I've never felt like this in May under his regime.

How many thumbs does Epstein have? My guess is two, which isn't enough to plug the holes in his team. History dictates that the Red Sox and Epstein fix things in late July, and we quit whining. But that's looking unlikely.

The trouble started about 18 months ago, when the team botched the Mark Teixeira negotiations. By pulling the plug and saving a few million pennies, the 2010 Red Sox are a mess at the plate and in the field.

Then it continued about six months ago when Epstein's plan began to fall apart. Jason Bay didn't like the team's negotiating tactics. The Red Sox wanted out of the contract if his knee or shoulder acted up, and they didn't want to give a fifth year. When he couldn't wait anymore and bolted for the Mets, they went to Plan B, which I'm still trying to understand.

With the loss of Teixeira and Bay, and the fact that David Ortiz is a shell of himself, the Red Sox have turned to something called "run prevention." Keep the other team from scoring a lot of runs and win the game. They (Bill James included) use graphs and matrices to prove their point.

In the old days, it was called pitching and defense. Whatever floats your boat, I guess.

I don't care if this is a "bridge year" or not (though it's an expensive "bridge" at $170 million). It's no fun watching it crumble. There are a lot of uncomfortable people, including Ortiz, Terry Francona, Mike Lowell and Tim Wakefield, guys we used to count on for reassurance.

Since the beginning of time, pitching has been the precursor to winning baseball. And the Red Sox arguably have the best starting staff in the game. They have three aces in Jon Lester, Josh Beckett and John Lackey, though these players haven't really brought their "A" games just yet. The Sox don't need to score seven, eight or nine runs to win. This staff, including the bullpen and the fourth and fifth starters, are good enough to keep the Sox afloat most years.

By saving a few million pennies, the 2010 Red Sox are a mess at the plate and in the field.

This year, however, the Tampa Bay Rays might throw a monkey wrench into the playoff mix. They look like a 100-win team. So do the Yankees. Which means that 95 wins—still a far cry from the Red Sox' current playing level—might not be good enough.

It's too early to make wholesale changes. Nobody is buying anything the Red Sox have on their current roster. They'll have to be within five or six games of both the Yankees and Rays in late July to make a worthwhile deal. At least they have the currency to bring in a bat, including the guy in San Diego that everyone is craving: Adrian Gonzalez.

The injury bug hit the Sox hard in April and part of May. I'd like to see this team with Jacoby Ellsbury batting first and Marco Scutaro batting ninth. I'm not excited about the middle of the lineup, though. This "all for one, and one for all" group isn't as exciting or powerful enough to beat the good teams. The pressure is on Kevin Youkilis and Dustin Pedroia to hit for more power. That isn't their game. Thirty homers for Youkilis and 15 for Pedroia should be more than enough. It's the other guys who aren't pulling their weight.

I've been on Ortiz's case for some time now, but Victor Martinez deserves some blame. He was supposed to be a savior at the third or fourth spot, but he's looked very ordinary. I'm not even talking about his shoddy work as catcher. Nor has defense been as advertised, but injuries may have something to do with that.

Altogether, I don't see more than 90 wins for the Red Sox. But Epstein has achieved great things, even crazy things, late in the season. So I'm not going to panic yet.

But I'm keeping the button close. ×××

ON WAKE, WASDIN, SAVVY AND SELLOUTS

5 SOX SOAP OPERAS

HEY, OUR CHECKS CLEARED! Lackey & Lester

The Old and the Restless Mike Lowell and Tim Wakefield are consummate pros. At least that's the reputation they've earned over a combined 31 seasons of service. But this year, they've morphed into those two old guys from The Muppet Show. Some of the moaning's justified, but eventually you have to focus on the team. I know that's not always easy, but you imagine these two could do it.

Days of Our DH I'm done trying to figure out Big Papi. One second he's making Rob Deer look like a contact hitter, and now, suddenly, he's a legitimate force again? I don't know. I guess I'll just sit back and enjoy it while it lasts—which is hopefully longer than it took for you to read this paragraph.

The Bold and the Questionable I understand ownership's argument: If all the tickets for a particular game are purchased, then, yes, technically, you can call it a sellout and extend your precious streak. But at the same time, have you seen the crowd at some of these games? Fenway's been emptier than a preseason game at Gillette. I'm not blaming the fans; the weather's sucked. I'm just saying we should call it what it is.

Port Papelbon With closers, there's always going to be drama. But this year, Jonathan Papelbon's been turning it out like he's David Lynch. Through all the ups and downs, the biggest concern is that Paps seems to have lost his edge; the other guys just aren't intimidated. Maybe it's his arm. Maybe it's his head. Maybe Paps needs to loosen up and rediscover his inner wacky, frat guy. Whatever the answer, he needs to find it soon.

All My Starters Jon Lester spent April pitching like John Wasdin. Lackey still hasn't found his East Coast groove. Beckett's season's a bigger disaster than Adalius Thomas. Dice-K's as reliable as AirTran. These four are making a combined $43M this year and have the team's destiny squarely on their shoulders. Lester's been better of late, but unless he has company (other than Buchholz), this soap opera's ending in tragedy.

3 Celtics Storylines

Race for Cash Much like Glen Davis did last year, Tony Allen's using the playoffs as a springboard into free agency. In Davis' case, the board ultimately snapped, and he face-planted back in Boston. But with Tony, I'm not sure. He'd probably be most comfortable staying with the C's, but his best offer might come from elsewhere. (And, yes, I still can't believe we're talking about the same Tony Allen.)

And Speaking of Tony Allen! There's no one in the world more thankful for TA's emergence than Marquis Daniels. If it weren't for Tony, the Celtics would be dead already, and Daniels' disappearing act would be in the spotlight. But now, if the C's pull this off, he'll be remembered more as a cheerful benchwarmer than a tearful bust.

Random Prediction He'll be a year older, have less tread on the tires and probably even play fewer minutes. But next season, Kevin Garnett's numbers will increase across the board. I'm not saying he'll snap back into 2008 form, but he'll be better than he was in 2009. (If you're wondering, 'Sheed will be much, much worse.)

4 DATES TO WATCH

5/26: The Celtics and Magic head back to Orlando for Game 5. Of course, Rashard Lewis will do everything in his power to make sure the series never goes that far.

6/3: The likely NBA Finals tip off. Just for fun, let's say the C's are playing. Q: Is there any way they'd rather spend this weekend in L.A. than in Phoenix? Might the Lakers actually be a better matchup?

6/4: Thousands of Bostonians converge on Camden Yards as the Sox take on the Orioles. Hmm, I wonder if ownership can somehow count that as another sellout...

6/5: The Revolution hit Seattle for a mid-season match against the Sounders. Yup, things get pretty slow this time of year.

"I'm a total straight arrow."

Soroff On BRITTANY CURRAN

The actress opens up about kissing costars, betting with Ray Romano and moisturizing with EVOO.

HOLLYWOOD IT-GIRL BRITTANY CURRAN, 20, was born in Weymouth and raised in Marston's Mills until she left for Los Angeles at age 11. Curran immediately began acting professionally, appearing on Mad TV and Power Rangers, as well as in numerous commercials. Her breakthrough role was playing Chelsea on Disney's popular The Suite Life of Zack and Cody and The Suite Life on Deck. On film, she appeared in Disney's Go Figure and earned critical praise for her role in The Uninvited. Additional credits include The Young and the Restless and Ghost Whisperer. Curran currently portrays Ray Romano's daughter on TNT's Men of a Certain Age. She lives in L.A.

Jonathan Soroff: Britney Spears, Brittany Murphy... does the name Brittany guarantee success in showbiz?
Brittany Curran: It does. As long as no one confuses me with them, it's fine. But [my] and Brittany Murphy's name is spelled the correct French way.

Would you rather kiss Cody or Zack?
I've never admitted this publicly before. The question is: Which one have I kissed? Zack. [Laughs.] Nobody knows that. But we're only friends now, just for the record.

How long before you're on the cover of People*?*
I could make it next week if I went out and murdered someone, but I think I'll go with fame rather than infamy.

Thing you miss most about Cape Cod?
The sports teams. I'm a major Red Sox fan. I love to harass Yankees and Lakers fans, which I think Boston will be happy about. I'd never even think about touching a Yankees hat. I play Ray Romano's daughter, and he's a big Yankees fan. I wanted to bet with him that if the Yankees got further in the playoffs, I'd buy him a Starbucks coffee, but if the Red Sox did, he'd buy me a Starbucks franchise. We settled on an In-N-Out Burger.

And if you're asked to play a Yankees fan?
If they ever wrote that into the script, I'd quit.

Would you ever do a nude scene?
There are certain types of nudity that I would never do. Full frontal—it doesn't matter how much they offered or if Steven Spielberg was directing. But there are more subtle types. There would have to be redemptive value.

Ever feel like you missed your childhood because you started working so young?
I had an amazing childhood. I got to do something other than the norm, and there's a very small percentage of people who get to do that.

Did you go to the prom?
[Laughs.] I took another Suite Life cast member. Aaron Musicant played the lifeguard. We became really good friends. I was 17, and he was 24. I had no interest in any of the high-school boys. They were just idiots, so I invited Aaron. My dad approved, because he trusted him way more than any of the little horny high-school boys. I had to get my principal's permission, because he exceeded the age limit, and when we went, a group of us rented a Hummer limo. There was a 10-year age gap in that limo.

Don't all teen stars end up in rehab?
They do, so I started shooting up heroin about a month ago. I'm gonna start doing coke in about a year, so that I'm on track for when they do the E! True Hollywood Story.

What are the best career moves: shaving your head, getting arrested, rehab?
Growing up in the industry, I saw how it happens. I was 14, and I'd be offered martinis and get these gift bags with bottles of vodka or gin in them. I'm a total straight arrow. I'm totally against any drug or alcohol use. I lecture all my friends about it. The weird thing is they actually seem to listen to me. Whether that's because the guys want to get into my pants, I don't know.

OK, Sister Mary Immaculata!
I've never even had a serious boyfriend. I still have fun. But I'm a bit of a Girl Scout that way.

When was the last time you had a zit?
I have had some where it was really bad timing. It was right between my eyes, and I had a screen test. It was like a third eye.

Fantasy kissing-scene partner?
I have the biggest crush on this actor, William Moseley. He's the blond older brother in Narnia.

Biggest beauty secret?
I use extra-virgin olive oil and a warm washcloth to moisturize and wash off the makeup.

Red-carpet secret?
The biggest thing, for me, is either not to smile or have a genuine one. That in-between smirk just looks fake.

Do you use Botox?
I don't ever want to get Botox. It paralyzes your muscles. I'm an actor. My job is for my face to be expressive.

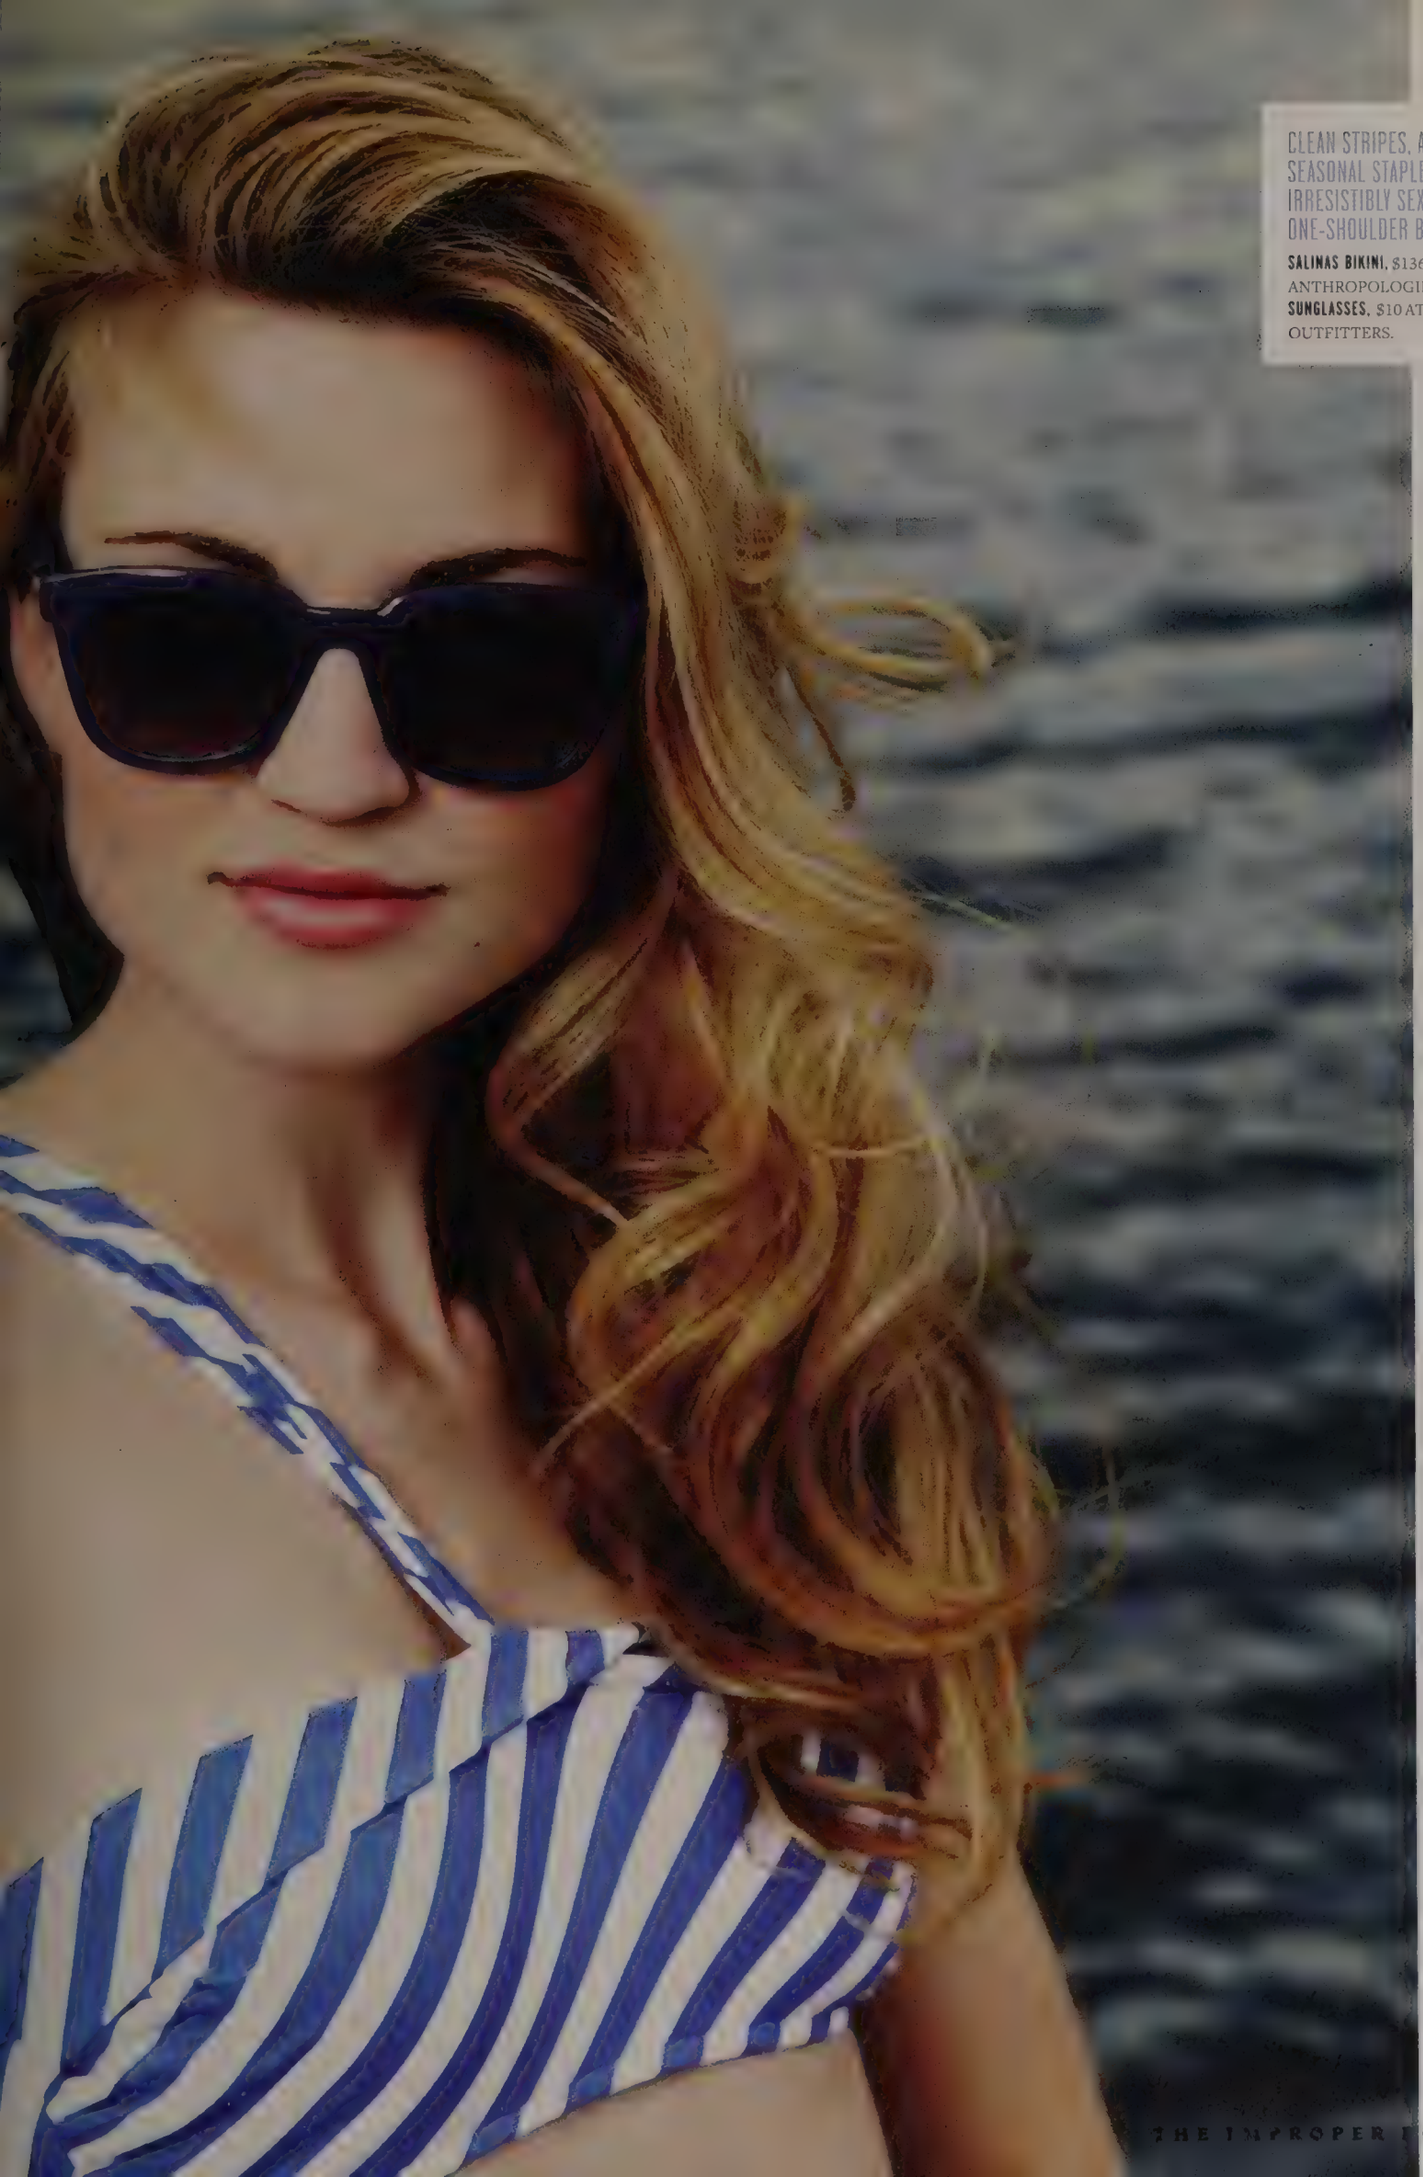
What TV show do you never miss?
Men of a Certain Age, but I'm obsessed with Glee. I also love Parenthood.

How do you stay sane in this business?
Whenever I come home from a red-carpet event, I usually just sit in my room, listen to classical music and write a poem. Writing brings your true self out, and it brings me back down to earth. I also make sure I don't Google myself.

Ever rehearse an Oscar acceptance speech?
I've stood in front of the mirror and actually started crying like I'd won one.

How did you skip over the awkward years?
Wow. Thank you! You've obviously never seen me on my ugly days.

If you could go back, would you take me as your prom date?
Of course I would! But I'm pretty sure I'd need to get the principal's permission.



What would you erase from your résumé?
I would erase all the blank spaces that aren't filled up by films I've starred in. ×××

GET OUT

PETER TAM of Uncle Pete's

DESTINATION: San Francisco, Calif.

LIMITED EDITION NINTENDO DS: I love how old-school my DS looks! It's small, so it's easy to carry around. The games are just simple enough to pass the time on the plane.

STÜSSY BACKPACK: I've carried a backpack all my life. I got this Stüssy one back in 2005, and it's always been my traveling buddy.

HD FLIP: I bugged out when the HD Flip came out, so I had to get one. I can make vacation home movies.

PORTER X ADIDAS SNEAKERS: I wear these to the airport every time. The zipper on the back allows me to go through security without touching my laces.

SMALL CEREAL BOXES: I always bring a couple for snacking on the plane. Just in case the airplane food is crap.

[illegible] TO SAN FRANCISCO: I really don't like to go to the tourist attractions, so this cool little book is my guide.

OF TOWN

DANIELLE KUPSC of Flock

DESTINATION: San Francisco, Calif.

→ IPOD TOUCH: Filled with music by Galactic, Radiohead, Grateful Dead, Jimi Hendrix, Louis Armstrong and Phish, to name a few. Good tunes always make the cross-country trip more bearable, and it gets me so excited for all the good live music I'll be hearing.

→ LINEA PELLE DYLAN MEDIUM TOTE IN SAND: The cross-body messenger style is easy to carry, and the leather has that beautiful, broken-in, slightly worn feel that only gets better as you use it. The sand color is perfect for the summer, since it goes with everything.

→ A PEACE TREATY JHELUM HANDWOVEN STOLE: It's a great piece to layer over a simple white tank for traveling and will definitely help with the transition from the cool San Francisco morning to the warmer afternoons.

→ OLYMPUS E-510 DIGITAL CAMERA: I love, love taking pictures. It's not too big or bulky, so it's easy to carry along on my trips, and it takes amazing photos. Sometimes I won't even look at the pictures until I get home, so there's an element of surprise.

→ TRAVEL JOURNAL: I always bring along a small journal so I can keep track of all my adventures. It definitely comes in handy when I discover new restaurants or boutiques. When I go back to the same destination, I can revisit some of the places I really loved.

→ 1965 VW CAMPER: It's painted in its original aqua and white colors with a folding table and refrigerator inside. The back bench folds down into a bed, so it's the perfect vehicle for traveling.

AUDRA BOYLE of Looc

DESTINATION: My husband and I, along with our 200-pound mastiff Norman, spend most free weekends at my family's house on Nantucket.

→LEMLEM PATIO DRESS: The island is a place to embrace simplicity, and, while classic and preppy, it's nice to switch it up with a little bohemian feel. These are the perfect beach cover-ups, which can be worn into the evening for cocktails.

→SAINT JAMES STRIPED SAILOR SHIRT: Looc's carried these shirts since we opened and will continue to carry them. They're a staple and go with everything—wear them to the beach, biking around the island paired with jean cut-off shorts, or to a casual dinner in town with a fun statement necklace.

→TILA MARCH ZELIG BAG: Since we have to take the ferry over, I need a good tote to carry on with me.

→TEA TREE SHAMPOO: Washing your hair with this in an outdoor shower after a long day at the beach = heaven.

→LOVER'S BLACK STRING BIKINI: I'm really into simple black bathing suits these days. They're flattering and go with everything if you throw on a cover-up and sandals.

→A NICE SHIMMER AND LIP GLOSS: One of the best parts of summer tans is wearing less to no makeup. I love Nars Copacabana shimmer for my cheeks and YSL lip gloss #47, which is a yummy, peachy pink.

→A GREAT BEACH READ: On my list for this summer: Lynn Barber's memoir, An Education, and finishing Stieg Larsson's trilogy.

GARY RITACCO of Uniform

DESTINATION: A rented house in Ogunquit, Maine—a little retreat for me and my most awesome team.

→CHEAP MONDAY SUNGLASSES: [A pair] for each of us 'cause it's gonna be mighty sunny on the beaches of Maine.

→A COUPLE OF FREITAG BOBS: This is an awesome tote bag that's perfect for all of our beach items. And it's waterproof.

→JACK BLACK OIL-FREE WATER RESISTANT SUN GUARD WITH SPF 45: This is for my fair-skinned dudes. I, on the other hand, will opt for the baby oil.

→KETEL ONE: The makings for a fine cosmo.

DEB COLBURN of Nomad

DESTINATION: My summer home in Truro, Mass. Also, I'll be traveling to L.A., Santa Fe and Mexico for business.

WEST AFRICAN TRAVEL TOTE: It's great because it's lined with very thin recycled bottles. These bags are by Malia Designs, which is a group that works to promote economic opportunities for women in developing nations and to prevent human trafficking.

→ [illegible] are the most comfy, hip jeans anywhere. I love their great fit and [illegible]

→ [illegible]

They're meant to be worn one at a time. These women make them outside the Soledad church in Oaxaca, Mexico. People travel across the country to go to the shrine, and they're for safety during travel. I also wear a necklace with my son and daughter's name and wedding date, my dog Dr. Watson, a silver airplane milagro and the Hindu goddess Lakshmi.

→ [illegible]

incredibly comfy and really good-looking. At my age, I can't afford to ruin my feet with groovy shoes that look good but kill. Cydwoqs make me happy... and my feet, too!

→ [illegible]

to have even a beginner's grasp of the language when I travel. These music-language CDs teach you the essentials — how to order in a restaurant, how to change money, ask for the baño... and they have a great backbeat while you're learning.

→ [illegible]

BAGS: Great for makeup, laundry, keeping your luggage organized, and they make great house presents to friends on arrival.

SUITED TO THE TASK

TIME MAY BE A HARSH JUDGE OF FASHION, BUT A FITTED JACKET IS FOREVER. HERE'S A GLIMPSE AT A DECADE OF LISA HUGHES, INCLUDING 2010'S LOOK, RECENTLY CAPTURED BY HER HUSBAND.

SHOWN IMPROVEMENT

THE WBZ-TV LEAD ANCHOR ON HER STYLE EVOLUTION OVER THE PAST DECADE

BY LISA HUGHES • PORTRAIT BY MIKE CASEY

DECIDING WHAT TO WEAR on television can be tricky. An item that looks great in person can fall flat on TV. And because anchors spend much of their time sitting at the news desk, an outfit's silhouette can get lost.

I try to strike a consistent balance between classic and current. Over the years, I've learned, rather publicly, from my mistakes. And I've received a great deal of feedback.

I'll never forget the apparently well-meaning woman who spotted me from the other side of a store on Newbury Street and shouted, "That gray jacket you had on last night? Throw it away! You looked like death!"

Mind you, I'd never met this lady before. She was a fellow shopper with an opinion. And she made me laugh. I decided that it must've spoken to her level of comfort with me that she could be so… honest.

As a rule, I keep it simple. Clean lines. Solid colors. Jackets that are fitted, but not tight. Nothing too fussy, distracting or busy.

But how has my style evolved over the past decade? I decide to consult the only impartial record available. Videotape.

I select one 11 pm newscast from the month of June for each year I've been in Boston. I'm a little nervous about this exercise. How much older do I look now? How egregious were my missteps?

Here's the snapshot:

2000: I'm three weeks into the job at WBZ. I'm reporting. Looking practical. Let's fast-forward…

2001: I'm apparently allergic to accessories and playing it safe with short, sporty hair and very light makeup. "More is more" might have been fitting advice.

2002: Whoa! Side part looks like female comb-over. Boxy gray jacket is the "anti-sexy." Why hasn't this tape been destroyed?

2003: I'm embracing accessories (too much?) with a large, sun-like pendant necklace. But am I wearing a man's jacket?

2004: Behold the fitted jacket. Finally. And it's red.

2005: Hallelujah! There's more color (pink) in my wardrobe. And I conquer my fear of saying "tuberculosis" on the air without stumbling.

2006: I'm a one-woman antipowder protest with a very shiny forehead. Thankfully, I'm accessorized.

2007: Lasso the eyeliner. But the hair is settling down. What I'd define as my on-air style is peeking through.

2008: Makeup is balanced. Hair doesn't flip. I think I look happier here.

2009: You can see that there's detail in the jacket. Three cheers for HD! Although I'd prefer to soften other "details" it enhances, I don't cringe watching this show.

Done. And it was not as painful as I'd feared. Bottom line: Aging isn't all bad.

Sure, I'd trade the crow's feet. But there's a sense of confidence that comes with experience, which also translates into the way we dress. We know who we are, what looks good and what to avoid.

That said, I still wrestle with the convention of dressing for TV. My weekend wardrobe feels very different. Color. Texture. Metallics. Bring it on!

But not the gray jacket that looked like death. It went to Dress for Success. And, I'm hoping, to a woman who looked so good in it that a fellow shopper on Newbury Street stopped to compliment her. ✖✖✖

"THERE'S A SENSE OF CONFIDENCE THAT COMES WITH EXPERIENCE, WHICH ALSO TRANSLATES INTO THE WAY WE DRESS."

The Phantom Menace

Who Says (Nec)Romance Is Dead? Nothing's more troublesome for a relationship than an old flame who just won't go away. Especially if she's dead. In Noël Coward's comedy Blithe Spirit, an author researching the occult gets more than he bargained for when a séance summons his wife from the great beyond (understandably, her replacement is less than pleased). See this spectral spectacle, running through June 5, at the Lyric Stage Company of Boston. Domenica Cerasaro

Capsules by Sean Burns

Ajami ★★ ½ One of this year's Oscar nominees for best foreign language film, this collaboration between Palestinian Scandar Copti and Israeli Yaron Shani is a nerve-jangling crime drama chronicling the ways sectarian strife creeps into everything, including the underworld. As a collection of crossed wires and doomed good intentions set in the Tel Aviv suburb of Yaffa, the movie makes it clear that surviving in this neighborhood is hard enough without also having to take part in a Holy War. Ajami is broken into six overlapping chapters, each following a different protagonist on a slightly skewed timeline. But the more that's revealed, the more Copti and Shani's puzzle starts to seem gimmicky and cheap. There's a vivid sense of place, and it's impossible not to feel for these young characters, but a more straightforward telling may have granted Ajami the noble inevitability of tragedy. As is, it's merely clever. (At Stuart Street Playhouse.)

Alice In Wonderland ★ ½ It's hard to remember now, but there was a time when Tim Burton was an original, exciting filmmaker and not just a brand name. These days, you know his formula. Burton takes an existing property and gussies it up with kooky production design and overindulgent performances from his wife, Helena Bonham Carter, and his other wife, Johnny Depp. The extravagant failure of Alice in Wonderland feels like nothing more than a once-great director beating his head against the brick wall of an artistic dead end. Not an adaptation of Lewis Carroll's book but a sequel, Linda Woolverton's screenplay finds a 19-year-old Alice returning to a Wonderland she barely recalls visiting. If this sounds familiar, that's because Steven Spielberg used the same faulty scenario for his awful Peter Pan flick, Hook. This bizarre rip-off of one of history's biggest bombs is a joyless, empty film. (In the suburbs.)

Babies ★ ½ We get it, they're cute. Enough already. Lacking narrative, dialogue or really anything a reasonable person might expect when plunking down $10 to see a movie, Thomas Balmes' pseudo-documentary is just a lot of shots of babies acting like… babies. They coo; they warble; sometimes they cry. End of plot synopsis. Spending about a year or so following four tots from Mongolia, Namibia, Tokyo and San Francisco, the movie simply shows kids doing what they do. I guess the locations are meant to hint at some universal truth, like perhaps cultural and geographic differences don't matter all that much when you're a barely-sentient newborn. This rainbow coalition of cute kids behaves identically. They're all adorable until they get hungry or have to go to the bathroom. They're also boring. Spending time with babies you know can be a moment-to-moment journey of discovery and joy. But not when they're strangers. This isn't a movie. It's a screensaver. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Harvard Square and in the suburbs.)

The Bounty Hunter ★ Do you think Jennifer Aniston and Gerard Butler even bother to watch their films? What is it with these two? If I see either one on a movie poster, I know I'm in for a night of crap. In this desultory, abysmally directed action-comedy, Butler stars as a drunken skiptracer charged with dragging his embittered ex-wife (Aniston) to jail. She's a tough-talking reporter (sure, she is) investigating a suicide that may have been a murder. Think they'll uncover the truth? Wonder if they'll get back together? Boasting production values unfit for late-night cable flicks, the movie looks washed-out and cheap. Butler is loutish and unappealing, while Aniston remains improbably tanned and glammed. No effort whatsoever was expended in the making of this movie. (In the suburbs.)

Clash of the Titans ★ ½ The original 1981 Clash of the Titans might've been a silly, turgid film, but at least it had an endearing campiness. The remake is all business, as one scene even trashes the previous picture's robot owl sidekick as a symbolic gesture. Sam Worthington, who also starred in Terminator: Salvation and Avatar without displaying a single personality trait, plays Perseus, the demigod illegitimate son of Zeus who takes on the heavens in a holy war. Worthington faces some arbitrary tasks, whose random rules are explained by other characters just seconds before the battle begins. Things drone on like a video game, with Perseus defeating one generic monster after another, and then starting over from scratch in the very next scene. This new Clash is so flat and by the numbers, it actually made me long for that annoying robot owl. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

OFF THE MARK

Ridley Scott's prologue misses the point.

Robin Hood ★★
Starring Russell Crowe, Cate Blanchett, Max von Sydow, Mark Strong, William Hurt and Danny Huston. Screenplay by Brian Helgeland. Directed by Ridley Scott.

Kerry Brown

MAYBE THE KEVIN Costner version wasn't so bad after all?

It's tough to think of a worse marriage of director and subject than Ridley Scott choosing to tackle the legend of Robin Hood. For viewers, Robin Hood brings to mind swashbuckling and shenanigans meant to taunt the Sheriff of Nottingham.

Think of Errol Flynn in Michael Curtiz's intoxicating The Adventures of Robin Hood. One of the first films ever shot in three-strip Technicolor—still the most vibrant form of photography, Digital 3-D be damned—the 1938 picture screened recently at the Brattle Theatre. It's hard not to smile just thinking about that joyful lark.

But there's never any joy in Scott's work. The prolific director of films both marvelous (Alien, Blade Runner) and awful (Gladiator, Black Hawk Down) has no discernible sense of humor. Frankly, he's a bit of an ostentatious dullard, and even his better movies could benefit from a bit of comic relief.

You won't find much of that in Robin Hood, a desultory slog through the aftermath of the Crusades and the writing of the Magna Carta that has almost nothing to do with the tale upon which it's ostensibly based. This is a glum saga in which everyone acts mopey and powerless between pseudo-Braveheart battles. And tragically, you can count on one hand the number of times Robin Hood even fires his trademark bow and arrow. Mostly, our hero is just another sad sack with a sword caught up in historical intrigue, as if Scott decided to secretly make a sequel to his lousy Crusades epic Kingdom of Heaven and weasel it into production by calling it Robin Hood.

Crowe stars as Robin Longstride, a soldier in King Richard's army with anachronistic, progressive political beliefs. This causes him to foolishly mention to his boss that the Crusades are a bad idea, and killing Muslim women and children doesn't make him feel closer to God.

> Even the most cynical viewer might wonder when this movie will ever be about Robin Hood.

Somehow, this leads to a case of mistaken identity straight out of Three's Company, and Longstride ends up in Nottingham pretending to be Sir Robin Loxley, whom he looks nothing like, even though the blind Sir Walter Loxley (the very funny Max von Sydow) is the only one to notice.

Lady Marion (no longer a maid, as Cate Blanchett is too old and too unflatteringly photographed to pass for that age) poses as his wife, and all would going swimmingly were there not a double agent working with King Philip and the French on a plan to invade England.

Played by Mark Strong, who's had a career year portraying villains, evil Lord Godfrey hisses, seethes and kills without much in the way of character development or motivation. He just looks scary because he's bald and has a Josey Wales scar on his mouth.

At some point, Walter Loxley explains the clandestine secrets behind the writing of the Magna Carta, but I was far more amused by this elderly, Bergman vet's musings on "his morning tumescence," which constitute the only stab at humor in this picture.

For reasons that still don't make any sense to me, Crowe spends the entire movie lurking inconsequentially on the sidelines, yet somehow ends up leading the English army on a beachfront battle against the invading French. All I could draw from the action is that Scott has watched the opening scene of Saving Private Ryan and really, really liked it. Multiple sequences are lifted outright from Steven Spielberg's tour de force, simply substituting arrows for bullets, and even the most jaded, cynical viewer might wonder when this movie will ever be about Robin Hood.

The answer arrives in the last five minutes. Scott's drab skies are abruptly replaced by the verdant greens of Sherwood Forest. Crowe wakes up, cracking a smile for the first time in 140 minutes as all the Merry Men finally act merry for a change. Robin publicly makes an ass out of the Sheriff with a twinkle in his eye, and the game is afoot. This dreary chapter at last finishes with the words, "The legend begins…"

Um, to paraphrase Jimmy Stewart in The Man Who Shot Liberty Valance, you probably should have just filmed the legend. ✖✖✖

Date Night ★★ As the writing in TV comedies grows more sophisticated and edgy, its big-screen competition keeps sliding backward. Proof of this sad fact, director Shawn Levy's latest strands Steve Carell and Tina Fey, two of TV's smartest, funniest performers/writers, in a tedious slog that feels so much like one of those 1980s Touchstone Pictures remakes of French farces, it probably should've starred Steve Guttenberg and Shelley Long. Playing a boring New Jersey couple who steal a reservation at a trendy Manhattan eatery, Carell and Fey end up involved in a convoluted mistaken-identity scenario that leaves them on the run from crooked cops and Ray Liotta's spaghetti-slurping Mafioso. The two stars ad-lib as hard as they can, assisted by a sly, self-mocking supporting turn from Mark Wahlberg. But there's no escaping the fundamental lameness of Josh Klausner's screenplay, and Levy seems to think we've come to a Carell and Fey vehicle for the car chases. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Exit Through the Gift Shop ★★★★ This remarkable, hilarious documentary from the secretive British street artist known only as Banksy begins as a slightly tedious story of an underground movement. Eccentric tagalong dilettante Thierry Guetta spent years chronicling the creation of spray-paint stencils that appeared on public walls from artists like Shepard Fairey and Banksy himself. But just when you think you've settled in for a routine hipster hagiography, Exit Through the Gift Shop implodes in spectacular fashion, as Banksy seizes control of the project from the incompetent director, and Guetta responds by setting the fickle art world on its ear with a million-dollar triumph of hype over substance. (This is the Adaptation of art documentaries.) Many are wondering if this is all a hoax, but if Exit Through the Gift Shop's droll, insistent provocations leave you asking questions about the thin line between artistic accomplishment and media manipulation, then it only rings more true. (At Kendall Square and West Newton Cinema.)

The Ghost Writer ★★★ ½ It's not my job to weigh in on Roman Polanski's personal issues. Sure, I'd never let him within a mile of my underage cousins, but The Ghost Writer is such a superlative example of craftsmanship that I walked out of the theater on a cloud. Adapted from Robert Harris' novel, this is a humdrum potboiler polished to a very fine sheen. Ewan McGregor gives his least-offensive performance in years as a hack writer assigned to wrestle the unwieldy memoirs of a transparent Tony Blair stand-in (strikingly well-played by Pierce Brosnan) into something publishable. What matters isn't the plot but the air of malevolence that Polanski brings to every seemingly innocuous conversation. He creates suspense without cutting, positioning the camera slightly off-axis for long takes that induce a sense of overwhelming dread. There's a casual elegance to these compositions, and Polanski displays an old-school command of the medium. Not a great story, but they just don't make 'em like this anymore. (At Kendall Square, Waltham Embassy and in the suburbs.)

Greenberg ★★★ ½ That person you wanted to be in your 20s is embarrassing at age 40. Writer-director Noah Baumbach, who helmed such cringe-fests as The Squid and the Whale and Margot at the Wedding, hits squirm-overdrive with this tale of a maladjusted rebel housesitting in L.A. while his brother's family tours Vietnam. Adrift in poolside ennui, Ben Stiller's Roger Greenberg seethes and insults according to ancient reflexes, alienating those around him for maximum discomfort. He doesn't understand adult notions of compromise and turns all his interior self-loathing and disappointment outward against the world. His character is unbearable, but the attitude comes from someplace genuinely painful. Only his brother's hapless 20-something assistant, played brilliantly by the bewitching Greta Gerwig, can break through Greenberg's armor of sarcastic aggression. She's too good for him, but you'll root for them to get together all the same. (At Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

How to Train Your Dragon ★★★ This is an unusually adorable CGI adventure from DreamWorks Animation, best known for the noxious Shrek series. Jay Baruchel voices a stumblebum Viking named Hiccup who aches to befriend dragons instead of slay them. Much to the chagrin of his Hagar the Horrible–looking dad (Gerard Butler, in his first tolerable movie), our young hero spends the bulk of the film cozying up to a moody creature nicknamed Toothless and teaching kids a valuable lesson about kindness conquering aggression. The story is a familiar one, with echoes of Avatar during the vertiginous 3-D flying sequences. But the movie is disarmingly sweet and strikingly well-crafted. Directors Dean DeBlois and Chris Sanders were responsible for Disney's charming 2002 oddity Lilo & Stitch. This one doesn't feel quite as fresh, but it gets the job done with rousing action sequences and a great orchestral score by John Powell. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Iron Man 2 ★★ ½ This overstuffed and underdeveloped sequel to 2008's smash juggles at least four separate plot-lines, which wastes enormous amounts of our time piling on new characters and setting up so many potential sequels and spin-offs, the movie has no chance to tell a coherent story of its own. But personality goes a long way, and while still a colossal disappointment, Iron Man 2 at least offers the small pleasures of a ridiculously overqualified cast riffing off one another, whenever their clunky CGI suits aren't getting in the way. With the movie in his back pockets, a swaggering Robert Downey Jr. once again stars as drunken, narcissistic playboy Tony Stark. He's got some delightful screwball banter with Gwyneth Paltrow and a worthy nemesis in steely-eyed, monosyllabic Mickey Rourke. Sam Rockwell and Garry Shandling bring on superlative smarm, but this time around director Jon Favreau lets sequel-itis and thudding heavy metal drown out the zingers. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Kick-Ass ★★★ The superhero movie for people who are sick of superhero movies, Matthew Vaughn's latest is a rude blast of rancid attitude and giddy, remorseless violence. This has some critics outraged, but Kick-Ass strikes me as entirely too silly to be cause for alarm. It's just a hell of a lot of fun, giving a well-deserved wedgie to Hollywood's recent glut of solemn, costumed avenger epics. Aaron Johnson plays the title character, a dorky teenage fanboy fed up with the world's injustices who takes to the streets attempting to fight crime. But lurking in the shadows are Big Daddy (Nicolas Cage) and Hit-Girl (Chloe Grace Moretz), a brutally efficient father-daughter team of bloodthirsty vigilantes. He walks around in a Batman costume; she's 11. At almost two hours, the film feels a bit windy. And yet the over-the-top finale is so boisterous, kinetic and just plain wrong that I laughed. God help me, I laughed. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Mommy and Me
Baby Talk
Kerry Washington stars in director Rodrigo García's melodrama Mother and Child.

Mother and Child ★ ½ Writer/director Rodrigo García, son of Nobel Prize–winner Gabriel García Márquez, has carved a niche for himself helming soapy, slightly ridiculous melodramas featuring great actresses and gorgeous lighting. Pictures like Things You Can Tell Just by Looking at Her and Nine Lives boast strong performances in the service of absurd clichés. Mother and Child is more of the same, but with the volume cranked up to 11. Annette Bening plays a sobbing train wreck who spends every waking moment obsessing about the daughter she gave up for adoption 37 years ago. A shockingly good Naomi Watts stars on a parallel track as her abandoned offspring, now a careerist man-eater. Yet another plot line follows Kerry Washington seeking to adopt the child of Half Nelson's disconcertingly grown-up Shareeka Epps. There's a lot of New Age music while hardened, interesting characters learn how to give up their dreams and idiosyncrasies to become dull, doting mommies. The final flourish of absurd coincidences makes 2004's risible Crash seem subtle. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square and Waltham Embassy.)

factory. Though described as a child killer in writer/director Wes Craven's original 1984 picture, we were always left to assume that Freddy Krueger was up to other things with the Elm Street kids. This version leaves out the ambiguity. It's telling of the filmmakers' diseased mindset that the only aspect of the story they choose to elaborate on is the history of Freddy's child molestation tactics. Upping the ante with sick flashbacks and shots of crying preschool girls with razor-fingernail scratches on their backs doesn't in any way enrich this particular saga. Giving Freddy a lair full of perverted Polaroids does nothing to make A Nightmare on Elm Street any scarier. It just makes the whole enterprise feel sick and tawdry, reminding you how wise Craven was to steer clear of that side of the story in the first place. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Please Give ★★★ ½ Miles from the rancid, materialist chick-flicks that dominate the marketplace right now, writer/director Nicole Holofcener's films tend to favor behavior over plot. They work their way toward tiny epiphanies that feel grounded and true-to-life. Nothing much happens, but everything changes. Please Give is Holofcener's strongest picture since her offhandedly-brilliant debut Walking and Talking and stars Catherine Keener in a role that shouldn't be remotely sympathetic. Except Keener is one of the great actresses of our time and is able to convey untold vulnerability even while saying exactly the wrong thing at the worst possible moment. As a liberal, guilt-ridden Manhattan antiques dealer making a fortune on dead people's furniture, Keener is a flurry of rationalizations, overcompensations and random crying spells. Her desperate attempts at volunteer work come to hilarious, sometimes poignantly disastrous ends, as she slowly learns the difference between "compassion" and "pity." It's a deeply unflattering role, yet Keener is never less than captivating. (At Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and Waltham Embassy.)

The Runaways ★★ ½ Dakota Fanning is all grown up. In case you had any doubt, director Floria Sigismondi's cheerfully trashy biopic about the 1970s girl group begins with a shot of Fanning's menstrual blood hitting the pavement on the Sunset Strip. Charting the rise and fall of these queens of noise by studiously embracing every stale cliché from every rock 'n' roll movie ever made, The Runaways is more of a kick than it has a right to be. There's an agreeable, lurid energy, as Sigismondi fully embraces the female empowerment/leering-at-jailbait contradictions that made the band such a sensation... at least in Japan. Fanning vamps it up as Cherie Currie, the original riot grrl who couldn't handle the drugs and adulation. Michael Shannon steals scenes as abusive manager Kim Fowley. But the movie belongs to Kristen Stewart's Joan Jett. Nailing Jett's hunched strut and snarled delivery, Stewart adds a layer of vulnerability. Add an extra star if you enjoy seeing teenage girls in their underwear. (In the suburbs.)

Shutter Island ★★★ ½ Martin Scorsese's latest is a work of malevolent ambience that works in spite of the occasionally lame story it's trying to tell. This is a Technicolor phantasmagoria seen almost exclusively through the point of view of its tormented, guilt-ridden antihero. Leonardo DiCaprio's federal marshal Teddy Daniels arrives on a hyperbolically forbidding island in Boston Harbor to investigate the abrupt disappearance of a mental patient at a hospital where rumors of mind-control experiments run rampant. It's an exercise in style, with a brilliant filmmaker flexing his muscles on inferior material. Scorsese telegraphs "the twist" in the opening moments, asking the audience to see the film as something scarier and more substantial than the simple narrative trick pulled in Dennis Lehane's novel. The earlier you figure out the "surprise" ending, the more rewarding the movie becomes as a portrait of denial and self-hatred. (In the suburbs.)

FAMILY TIES

Slide virtuoso Derek Trucks teams with wife Susan Tedeschi for a joyful venture.

MUSIC CROSSES FAMILY lines for Derek Trucks. He's played guitar in the Allman Brothers Band, featuring his drummer uncle Butch Trucks, since he was a teenager. He's toured with Eric Clapton, whose group Derek and the Dominoes inspired his name. He won a Grammy with his 15-year-loyal Derek Trucks Band for the 2009 album Already Free. Now he's coleading a band with his singer/guitarist wife, Susan Tedeschi, ith whom he shares two kids and a dual-career uffle.

'I've been on the road pushing 200 to 300 ys a year, and that's an unsustainable way to things," the 30-year-old Trucks says from eir home in Jacksonville, Fla. "You have to ure out what's important, and at this point in e, it's family—and then a great band that's an tension of that."

So while the Allmans have slowed down, he d the Norwell-bred Tedeschi have also put e solo bands that bear their names on hold r a year to hatch the Derek Trucks & Susan deschi Band.

They set the groundwork two summers ago, aming up to front the Soul Stew Revival, a oup that augmented the Derek Trucks Band ith horns to focus on soul and blues covers. is time, they're writing original material r an octet that draws from their respective oups, in what Trucks calls "divine pairs."

DTB keyboardist/flutist Kofi Burbridge re- ins his bassist brother Oteil from the Allmans, TB frontman Mike Mattison serves as one of vo additional singers, and Tyler Greenwell om Tedeschi's group shares a dual-drummer ckbone.

Trying to place the band's style, Trucks tes everything from Sam Cooke and Bobby omack to Jimi Hendrix and Joni Mitchell. "I n't really see a ceiling yet. There's so much y," Trucks says of the group, which has begun recording in his home studio, with plans to release a CD next year. "It's been nice hearing everybody's take on things and throwing it on the pile. This year, we're just gonna be writing tunes and stacking wood."

Trucks didn't need much woodshedding after he bought his first guitar in a yard sale at age 9. Picking up fundamentals from his father, he landed his first paying gig at 11, launched his first band a year later and began sitting in with the Allmans. Music came naturally to him. Trucks had grown up listening to his uncle's outfit, particularly the slide guitar of Duane Allman, who doubled as Clapton's foil in Derek and the Dominoes.

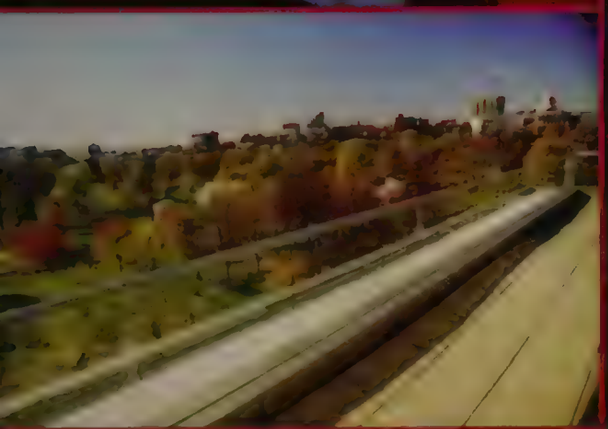
Slide also became Trucks' signature, helping him become the youngest player to make Rolling Stones' 2003 list of the "100 Greatest Guitarists of All Time" (if far behind No. 2 pick Duane Allman). "Originally it was wanting to figure out what the hell that sound was and trying to emulate it," says Trucks, who also admired Elmore James, Johnny Winter and later, lap-steel master Aubrey Ghent, who officiated at Trucks and Tedeschi's 2001 wedding.

Trucks says most of his ideas come from a "slide player's vocabulary," crediting singers and horn players for inspiration. "I'm thinking of melody first, and the slide is seamless," he says. "I can attack the nuances a little better."



He prefers nuance to showmanship, gladly ceding the spotlight to Tedeschi. "She has great charisma and stage presence," he says. "That's just something I couldn't care less about for myself."

Still, while he keeps his head low, Trucks can rip it toe-to-toe with guitar hot shots from Allmans mate Warren Haynes to Clapton. And this summer, he might find some extra jams. He and Tedeschi open for guitar titan Jeff Beck at Bank of America Pavilion on June 3. "I wouldn't presume [playing together], but you never know," Trucks says. And they'll play stacked festivals like Haynes' Mountain Jam in upstate New York on June 5 and Maine's inaugural Nateva Festival on July 4, as well as the Cape Cod Melody Tent on July 2.

But naturally, Trucks shies away from "guitar battles," noting how veterans like Clapton and B.B. King leave you feeling "they haven't played their whole hand. I've come to appreciate that more. Once in a while, you'll see those guys where they'll lay it all out in a pool of blood and sweat, and those are magical nights. But there are some guys who feel like they have to do that every night and a lot of times, you're given too much." ✖✖✖

National Anthems Baritone is the new tenor, thanks to the National. Matt Berninger's deep, mellow voice joins the ranks of Jim Morrison and Tom Waits as a triumph of the bass clef. Berninger accompanies the layered, ethereal guitars, keyboards and drums of bandmates and brothers Aaron and Bryce Dessner and Bryan and Scott Devendorf. No Country for High-Pitched Men

National Anthems Baritone is the new tenor, thanks to the National. Matt Berninger's deep, mellow voice joins the ranks of Jim Morrison and Tom Waits as a triumph of the bass clef. Berninger accompanies the layered, ethereal guitars, keyboards and drums of bandmates and brothers Aaron and Bryce Dessner and Bryan and Scott Devendorf. Hear their resonant sound on June 2 and 3 at the House of Blues. Tom Samph

ATTENTION BOUNTY HUNTERS! BONUS POINTS TO ANYONE WHO CAN CAPTURE AN IMPROPER READER LIP-SYNCHING "WATERLOO" AT THE EUROVISION SONG CONTEST, HELD ON MAY 29 IN OSLO, NORWAY

Unlike the rest of your friends, we want to see the photos from your next trip. Where did you take us? Send us a picture of you or a buddy, or better yet, someone famous reading THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN and tell us where you were. The wilder your destination and the more creative your photo, the better your chances of making the cut in the esteemed IMPROPER Sightings.

When John Dino Donovan retired from the Boston Police Department, he realized his dream of visiting San Diego. Turns out, it's just like Revere Beach.

On the Grand Canal in Venice, Italy, Erika Frisby and Katlyn Holland got annoyed when their gondolier didn't know the way to the Piazza San Marco and then charged them extra for luggage.

At the Royal Andalusian School of Equestrian Art in Jerez, Spain, Stephanie Iannucci, Nairi Aprahamian, Christina Kim and Emily Brady were disappointed by the lack of posters of unicorns with rainbows.

Pollster Scott Rasmussen and former Oklahoma congressman Ernie Istook told us that 71 percent of "Improper" readers feel generally positive about the Sightings page but 18 percent think it should show more skin.

LIFE IN THE FAST LANE

Party Hopping

To quote T.S. Eliot, April is the cruelest month, at least for those on the philanthropic social circuit. Up north, it may be the start of black-fly season, but here, it's black-tie season—the nonstop April/May marathon of three to five fund-raisers every night of the week.

It started in earnest with Literary Lights, the Associates of the Boston Public Library's annual fete at the Park Plaza. As always, they pulled out all the stops to honor local authors, and as always, there was a goodnight grab for the books that decorated the tables. Present and accounted for: mutual-fund eminence Ned Johnson and the lovely Lily, the über-charitable Paul and Katie Buttenweiser, the incomparable Vivian Spiro and her other half, Lionel, Beacon Hillions Biddy and Bob Owens, keynote speaker Nathaniel Philbrick and one woman who made the germane observation: "If more parties were held by candlelight, we wouldn't need Botox."

Next up was the 25th anniversary celebration of Healthcare for the Homeless at the Seaport Hotel, where Chronicle's Mary Richardson and Dr. Larry Ronan were honored. Prominent among the throng were such power-players as Judge Nancy Holtz and her handsome husband, Herb, gazillionaire Paul Verrochi and the beautiful Kelly Antonuccio, WGBH-TV minx Emily Rooney, Red Sox legend Dennis Eckersley, advertising titan Jack Connors, and one woman who described her outfit as "a cross between Dolce & Gabbana and a Bosnian refugee."

For the second year in a row, The Theater Offensive's annual ClimActs! gala was held under the Big Apple Circus' big top, and it attracted all the A-gays and those who love them, including the evening's ringmaster, Joyce Kulhawik, Project Runway contestant Christian Siriano, the ever-affable Eric Georgi, media mogul Ron Ansin and drag superstar Eugene Tan, wearing a pair of whirling, blue police lights on his nipples. The evening was highly entertaining, with a contortionist whose flexibility had everyone oohing and aahing and an aerialist who had everyone panting. (If you're reading this, I'm in a relationship but would consider making an exception for you).

At the other end of the spectrum was the Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum's Spirit Benefit, a beyond-elegant black-tie affair that began with drinks in the courtyard and continued with a promenade to dinner across the street (giving guests a glimpse of the new Renzo Piano addition). Looking stunning in a dress reminiscent of the museum's masterpiece, "El Jaleo," was Katherine Chapman (the third Mrs. Staples), who greeted the delightful Rylan and Kristin Hamilton, the stunning Jessica Gifford with the hale and hearty Andrew Nigrelli, the righteous Rev. Ray Hammond and Dr. Gloria White-Hammond and one woman who complained that her pearls were so heavy she was getting back pain (otherwise known as rich woman's sciatica).

Meanwhile, across town at the Ritz, the Commonwealth Shakespeare Company held its 1940s-themed gala, which drew culture vultures Kurt Gress and Sam Parkinson, self-made man Sean Healey, super-lawyer Irwin Heller, Broadway stars Anthony Rapp and Kerry O'Malley, and so on and so forth.

During gala season, even Mondays are fair game, and the American Repertory Theater's pA.R.T.y took place in a gorgeously decorated space in Kendall Square, attracting the likes of cochair Kathy Connor, the elusive Rich Levitan, literary couple Stephen McCauley and Sebastian Stuart, a woman who responded to the comment, "You look great for your age," by saying, "It's all the vodka and cocaine—I've embalmed myself," and a man who, when everyone rose to applaud the evening's honorees, said, "A standing O is always a good excuse to get the underwear out of your buttcrack."

Opening Night of Pops, of course, is an integral part of the spring festivities, and for its 125th anniversary, the facade of Symphony Hall was festooned with balloons, prompting one guest to say, "What is this? A car dealership?" Inside, pre-concert, there was a chance to schmooze with the likes of the puckish Peter Nee, Republican publican Tom Kershaw, the blue-blooded Cecile Higginson Murphy (a descendant of the BSO's founder) and Milton doyenne Hilda Morrill with her hubby, Ron. The balloons, as it turned out, posed something of a problem, since the ones tied to the ceiling kept popping throughout the concert. Still, when they finally floated down during "The Stars and Stripes Forever," it was worth staying to finish them off.

All that, in the space of a few weeks. So what, exactly, can we learn? With apologies to Al Jolson: Though April galas may come your way, they're mostly done by Memorial Day. ✖✖✖

THIS IS AN AD FOR A BURRITO.

Founder & Co-CEO Steve Ells with rancher Bill Niman in Bolinas, California

Behind every great burrito is a great farmer. Not a factory. Not a scientist. Not a bunch of shareholders. But a farmer who does things right. Like raising animals responsibly, without the use of added growth hormones or antibiotics, and feeding them a strict vegetarian diet. It's part of what we call Food With Integrity and it's just one of the things that makes a Chipotle burrito taste so delicious. So even though we probably should have shown a tasty burrito in this ad, it wouldn't have begun to tell the whole story.

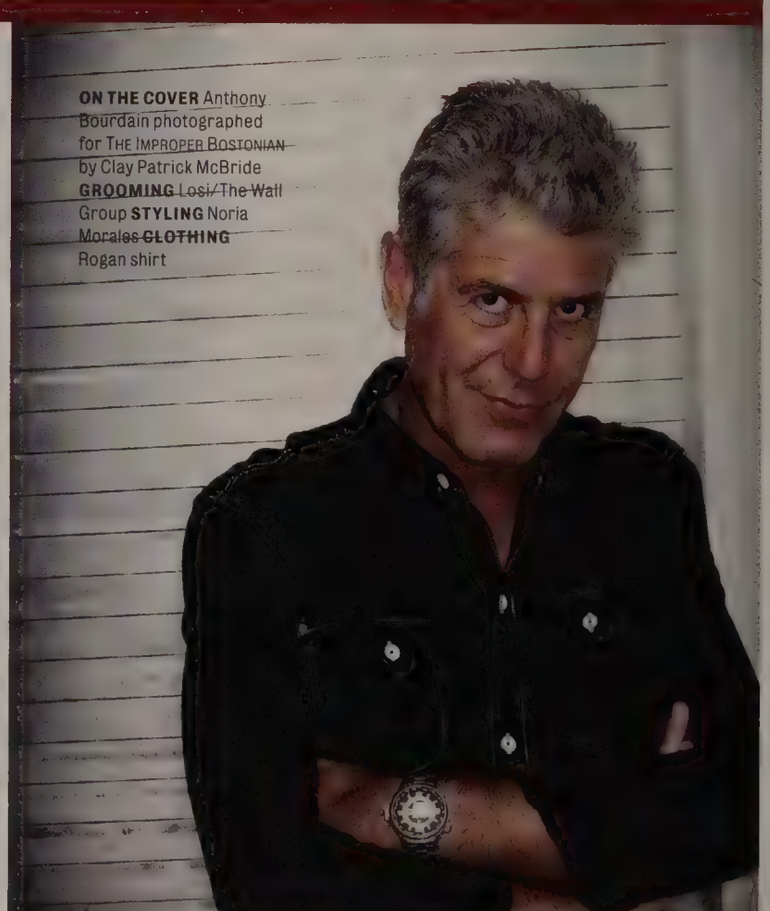
Miracle Whip



Like bacon or butter, whipped feta has transformative powers. Spread it on just about anything and a mediocre meal suddenly looks like a photo from Better Homes and Gardens. I served some at a dinner party recently, and my friends went into raptures. Eventually, I produced a second container from the fridge to my husband's marked disappointment.

I regularly replenish our stash at the Siena stand at the Copley farmers' market, now open for the season. Local products and produce, celebrated in this issue, breathe life into my cooking in so many ways. Cannellini beans, a staple ingredient over the past few months, look a lot more appealing tossed with leafy greens. Particularly with a smear of whipped feta.

Good Eats

On the Lamb

The local buzz about Bergamot's astonishingly tender lamb loin—that it must be done sous-vide—approaches the truth. Chef Keith Pooler considered the technique, but the vacuum cooker didn't make the kitchen cut by opening day. Instead, Pooler uses an equally effective reverse-sear method, in which he low-roasts the meat, then gently colors the exterior over a hotter flame. Pooler plates the rosy-pink results with crisp-tender farro risotto, a maitake cluster and a reduction made with thistly stinging nettles. ELIZABETH BOMZE

Wine

Fill in the Blanc

I always scan a list for chenin blanc. It shows how seriously, or not, a restaurant takes wine. With some exceptions, if an establishment ignores chenin, it's a red flag. Other than lack of awareness—the wine only comes close to expressing its true potential in France's Loire Valley and in South Africa—there's really no excuse. Versatile and food-friendly, chenin spans the full spectrum from luscious and honeyed, to moderately sweet, to bone-dry. The best has a very long aging curve, so don't discount a bottle with a few years on it. (I had a 1934 Vouvray recently that tasted pristine!) The following picks from South Africa achieve that ever-elusive combination of quality and value.

Raats "Original" Chenin Blanc →
COASTAL REGION, 2009 (Wine Cask, Somerville, $12). Light greenish-yellow, this drier style wine shows delicate pear and herbal aromas, with pie-crust scents and hints of earth and flowers. Juicy, soft and understated on the palate, it's mild with persistent spice accents. This is your basic backdrop, mood-enhancing wine that, upon closer inspection, reveals a subtle mineral character. In other words: The more you sip, the more you like.

← Simonsig Chenin Blanc
STELLENBOSCH, 2009 (Martignetti Liquors, Brighton, $13). This hand-harvested estate-bottled winner is all about the honey, melon and earthy apple fragrance, which leads you to expect sugar, although there's virtually none on the palate. With sautéed peach and cinnamon-like notes, it's ultra-ripe and layered in flavor. Chenin covers about 20 percent of South Africa's grapevine acreage, and Stellenbosch is one of the leading sources. Unoaked and fresh, this is a gently balanced accompaniment to seafood salads or grilled scallops.

DeMorgenzon Chenin Blanc →
STELLENBOSCH, 2008 (Granite Package, Weymouth, $32). A stunner! Dramatically mineral-laced with concentrated, rich Anjou pear, it's one of those candidates for stashing in the cellar and revisiting five to 10 years down the road. DeMorgenzon's grapes are harvested from decades-old vines, and the wine is barrel-fermented, giving it a velvety richness. With the weight of a chardonnay, the tart elegance of a sauvignon blanc and the thrilling fruit expression to match any riesling, this may well be the best dry chenin I've tasted outside France.

IT'S A REALLY FINE LINE. Truth be told, you have to be a little bit of both. You need to be boisterous and loud to get results, but... you catch more bees with honey. You can yell, "Peel these fing potatoes!" But do you want to be portrayed like that? It needs to stay professional. Even when I'm cooking with my mom, I'll say, "Move over, just let me do this." It's not being mean, it's just that if you're going to do something, do it right. I'm a perfectionist, and I've been told that I sometimes come down too hard on people, but working with Gordon Ramsay showed me that's OK. Mediocrity is not good enough, and you should demand perfection. Always keep it professional and respectful, but demand excellence. Of course, I'd rather be loved than feared, but if I have to yell to get [perfection], so be it.

Going Out

SIBLINGS AND CRAWDADS

Skipping the simmering stage of developing trends, Viet-Cajun cuisine has bubbled up in Boston. Originating with Vietnamese seafood retailers in Louisiana and spreading throughout the South, the Asian-influenced boil has arrived in Dorchester, thanks to Tuan and Long Le's BROTHER'S CRAWFISH. "I spent a lot of time in Houston where my cousin owns a little joint like this," says Tuan Le, 31. "I worked with him for half a year, and I picked up on the ingredients."

The ingredients for the boil include a traditional Cajun mix, along with celery, oranges and pineapple juice. The freshwater crustaceans are then tossed in your pick of one of four flavors, the top-seller being the garlic-and-butter blend named "oriental express."

Opened March 19, Brother's can go through as much as 300 lbs. ($9.95, per) of crawfish a day, and as neighbors learn the technique of snapping backs and sucking the fatty viscera from heads, they've developed their own styles. "I've had people order one pound and take an hour to eat the whole thing, just savoring everything," Tuan Le describes. "And I've had people just go straight for the tail or straight for the head. Either way, everyone enjoys it."

As growing curiosity draws locals, Southerners come for a taste of the familiar. There's ribs ($7.99) and barbecue chicken ($6.99), but Yankees can compete in those departments. Quality crawfish needs a stamp of approval from those who know, like, say, an entire party of LSU alumni. Reports Long Le, "They're used to the real deal, and they were very satisfied." NICK ALTSCHULLER

BALANCING ACT

James Joseph Salon owner William George debuts a vegan line.

What was the inspiration for your line?
Most hair products really just focus on the hair and ignore the skin, so the scalp was an important issue that was being neglected. There needs to be a balance between science and nature.

You've started with shampoo and conditioner. Any plans to expand?
The core of any good line is the shampoo and conditioner, so I focused my attention on those two first. The next product is going to be a leave-in condition protection for hold and shine. Conditioning and holding are opposites, though, so it needs to have both—I like a challenge.

Why'd you decide to go organic?
I wanted my line to be free of everything that's potentially carcinogenic or unhealthy—and have nothing that's not necessary. Many companies will try to make things look more luxurious for marketability, and I think consumers are smart enough now that they don't necessarily need that. Even the bottles I chose are the natural color of the plastic.

What makes your line different from the rest?
I always thought that each product was missing something or wasn't quite right. The really important thing for me was to create a luxury product that was still affordable. Also, a lot of sulfate-free products don't lather, but this one still does. We're Americans.... we like the lather! It's satisfying.

How does it work on color-treated hair?
It's low pH, which makes it great for chemically treated hair. Higher pHs keep the cuticle of the hair open, which allows the color to wash out. It's gentle enough that it can even be used as a body wash.

How'd you choose the scent?
There are citrus, floral and earthy notes so that no one thing stands out. It's not too strong and has a universal appeal that both men and women like. I want my whole house to smell like my products.

ANIMAL RAGE

TO THE CRAZY LADY AT FRANKLIN PARK ZOO ON MAY 24 WHO SCREAMED AT MY 14-MONTH-OLD SON WHO WAS CHECKING OUT YOUR DAUGHTER'S RIDE-ON CAR: I felt embarrassed for you, the way you were yelling at us and telling us to "Shoo, shoo!" when we decided to escape your wrath. Your friend was even mortified by your rude, unnecessary behavior. I hope, for your kid's sake, you lighten up because you seriously have a screw loose! The animals were tamer.

Hoping we never meet again

To "Happy to be alive":

I am NOT the driver you wrote about, but I felt a compelling need to reply to your post. First, I'm sorry about your sick father—I would not wish that on anyone—but how is your post any better of a response than the driver that shouted a profanity? It's hypocritical. The only thing worse than an impatient driver is the ahole who is so distracted by a phone call that they can't see a slowly moving, two-ton car! Take some accountability. If you're saying, "Take the high road," you should drink your own Kool-Aid. Hope your father's health improves. Happy to be righteous

To the two bicyclists speeding the wrong way down a one-way road:

Thank you for screaming at me to "look both ways" and to "pay attention to my surroundings" as you almost ran me over. Bicycles count as moving vehicles, and riders are required to follow the traffic laws, including one-way street travel and yielding to pedestrians. Your self-righteous attitudes are both unwelcome and undeserved. Bicyclists like you exacerbate the feeling of animosity toward all riders. It is no wonder everybody loathes bicyclists.

For the Love of It

When mapping out their new wine shop, TJ and Hadley Douglas used their marriage as a model. TJ, an industry expert, can pick apart a bottle grape by grape, while Hadley enjoys a good California red or something bubbly without the usual intimidation factor. The Urban Grape—which opens June 11 in Chestnut Hill—combines their two approaches into a user-friendly space. Wines are organized by weight (i.e. medium-bodied reds), and a high-tech tasting system allows customers to try samples. Feel free to ask questions; no snobbery allowed.

Battle Stations

Iron Chef America's dirty not-so secret: The contestants aren't completely in the dark regarding the mystery ingredient. To see real panic, attend Cocktail Wars held on the last Sunday of the month at Woodward.

"We wanted to do an industry night, but I wasn't partial to one of those cheesy promo nights," barman "English" Bill Codman says. So they started a competition in which Codman and an opponent would have 20 minutes to create an original drink and five minutes to mix it for a panel of judges. Looking for a fight, Codman chose Eastern Standard's Nicole Lebedevitch as his first challenger, because, "I've seen her make drinks for customers who say, 'I want a drink with banana, whiskey and Guinness.'" For the secret ingredient, manager Paul Monahan chose two: peach and Agavero (a tequila liqueur with Damiana flower flavorings).

As the timer began, the contestants started tasting, shaking, mixing, cutting and burning, playing to the crowd (with Lebedevitch taking a second to throw cash to the judges). Codman came up with the Miami Blush, a bubbly cocktail with an earthy note from a mescal rinse, plus peach, Agavero, tequila blanco, agave simple, rosé and a burnt peach-skin garnish. Lebedevitch devised Behind Smoke and Bitters, featuring egg-white froth and a healthy dose of Angostura.

In her victory speech, Lebedevitch proclaimed, "We're bartenders; we have fun. This is what we do." Codman, the loser in his inaugural event—and ironically allergic to peaches—smiled through numb lips and nodded in agreement. NICK ALTSCHULLER

HELLO TO HAGGIS

Somewhere, Robert Burns is smiling.

YES, THEY'LL SERVE haggis at the Haven. What may be Boston's only Scottish restaurant and bar will specialize in "comfort food" and live music, with comfort equaling oatmeal-stuffed sheep stomach. Also on the menu: Finnan haddie, skirlie and chicken tikka masala. Matt Murphy's owner Jason Waddleton plans to open the Haven in June in the former Zon's space in Jamaica Plain, bringing Ben Waxler from Ten Tables as chef.

THE UPSIDE OF NEPOTISM: Sam's at Louis Boston is a real family act. The new waterfront restaurant at Louis at Fan Pier is named for owner Debi Greenberg's daughter, Samantha; it's run by Esti and Drew Parsons; chef Ken Rogers's sous chef is brother Andy, and their brother Jon is tending bar. Drew's brother Jon heads up the beverage program. Keeping with the program, the streamlined dinner menu offers a selection of simply prepared dishes, all served with "family style sides." Open daily, Sam's offers outdoor dining on its deck, just in time for summer.

SPEAKING OF OUTDOOR DINING, the forthcoming Deuxave will boast "the only street-level patio on Comm. Ave. in the Back Bay," chef/co-owner Chris Coombs says. Coombs hopes to open in August, when those 24 outdoor seats will likely be prime real estate.

CLOSING (AND OPENING) TIME: Sports Depot will close in July and reopen in September as a Pizzeria Regina, with a full bar. Zocalo Cocina Mexicana, which closed in Brighton, will reopen in a new Back Bay location in June.

EMPIRE FALLS

The difficulties of food production throughout time

STROLLING THROUGH VAST landscapes, often in a mood of colorful inquiry, Evan D.G. Fraser and Andrew Rimas examine the history of food production. (Disclosure: Rimas is managing editor at The Improper.) Nature's whims—droughts, flooding and famine—and a sometimes-fatal blindness to the bigger agricultural picture have afflicted what they call "food empires." Whether discussing 10th-century monks brewing beer or Italians collecting African wheat, the authors show a keen appreciation for the resourcefulness of agriculturalists, framing the tale with a narrative about the adventures of a hapless Florentine merchant. Throughout, they fix stern eyes on the horizon of possible, even probable, disaster.

Empires Of Food: Feast, Famine, and the Rise and Fall of Civilizations
by Evan D.G. Fraser and Andrew Rimas

Rimas, managing editor at The Improper, lives in Brookline.

Deforested lands, intensive grain cultivation, soil exhaustion and lengthy trading routes have led to environmental vulnerability and failed ecosystems. Nowadays, problematic methods include planting a single variety rather than a balanced portfolio, using pesticides and genetically modifying crops. In exploring modern dilemmas and solutions, Fraser and Rimas reveal the idealistic upside of Fair Trade, organics and Slow Food, but also the downside of their limited success in changing the system of how we eat. Poetic language imbues their many stories, which brim with fascinating characters. ✖✖✖

"The leafhopper, scourge of the Japanese, is making a comeback and is likely to be the recurring villain of the upcoming seasons. It is naturally imperious to the defensive toxins spewed by the new Chinese rice. When the crop is planted, the leafhopper smiles, twirls its moustache, and wraps a bib around its spiny throat."

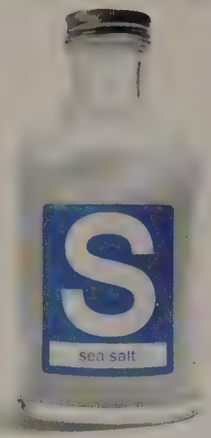
Edible salt's chemical name is sodium chloride.



(NaCl)

Inedible salt's name is Lay's Balsamic Sweet Onion Flavored Potato Chips.

Animal cells die without salt. But slugs die when you salt them. Ergo, slugs are magic.

The term salty means coarse, and is usually applied to newspaper gossip columns ("Here's a salty tale about a celebrity with a taste for spinach... and something else") and sailors ("On warm summer evenings, Popeye would hang around the pier and make salty suggestions to cabin boys").

Fast Facts

Salt of the Earth

Salt. Nature's greatest condiment, or just another fiendish line on the nutrition label? Everyone knows salt is essential for the existence of life and nachos, but New York Mayor Michael Bloomberg recently launched an initiative to reduce sodium content in restaurant dishes and prepared foods. Where our southern cousins lead in public-health legislation, will New Englanders follow? To inform the debate, here are some very useful and important facts.

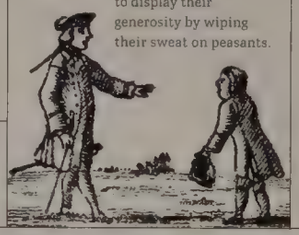
Flash Quiz!
Which of the following rocks are edible?

A) Salt
B) Pop Rocks
C) Glenn Beck's brain
D) That colored chalk in kindergarten
E) Basalt, lightly sauced

Answer: A (and C if you're a zombie.)



▶ Words etymologically related to salt include SALAD and SALAMI, but not salacious, which is from the Latin salire, "to leap." Nor salmon, which is from the Scots Gaelic for "fish that, when raised in commercial hatcheries, is gagging with PCBs."

Dough Brother
There are many stories about the pretzel's origins, but the snack is generally believed to date to the early Middle Ages when medieval German bar patrons demanded something to nibble with their mugs of cholera-water.

Liquid Assets
Throughout history, salt has been essential to food preservation and has sometimes been used as currency. Thus, rich people used to display their generosity by wiping their sweat on peasants.

Fort Point's Menton is worth the splurge.

MAKE NO MENTON OF IT The cuisine and chic space feel sophisticated.

MENTON IS A SMALL city on the Mediterranean where the French Côte d'Azur meets the Italian Riviera di Ponente. Taking the name of this paradisiacal place for her most ambitious project yet, chef/restaurateur Barbara Lynch has created an extraordinary eatery whose incomparable cuisine, high style, sophisticated service and genuine hospitality mirror the town's grace and warmth. French food has reached new heights in Boston.

A globe of clementines, a nod to an annual festival in Menton, provides a pop of color in an otherwise stark, chic interior. At the table, elegant stemware and sparkling silver match the brilliance emanating from the kitchen. House-made breads, ranging from flaky croissants to three types of rolls, and constantly changing amuse-bouches previewed the good things to come.

The prix fixe menu ($95) offered three or four choices per course, each executed with precision and flair. The salad of green asparagus with fresh hearts of palm contained four perfect spears, at once tender and resilient. Another triumph, a thick slice of duck foie gras came with buttery brioche, tangy rhubarb compote and Marcona almonds.

A seafood course followed, featuring soft-shell crab prepared two ways: the body pan-fried and the legs tempura-battered and deep-fried, providing contrasting textures and tastes. Pickled green tomatoes and green-goddess dressing added nice counterpoints.

Maine halibut, delicately cooked en croûte with fava beans and hen-of-the-woods mushrooms, soared. Although the portion was small, there was a magnitude of rich flavor.

Migrating from surf to turf, I selected the filet with béarnaise for my next course. The perfectly tender beef came with baby carrots, small onions and pleasantly bitter greens. Also tender and juicy, Elysian Field Farm lamb benefited from its delicious garnish of cranberry beans, black garlic and Castelvetrano olives.

Well-paced, the prix fixe fully satisfied our hunger while still leaving room for dessert. Palet d'Or, a delicious cake of pine nuts and honey, and chocolate tart didn't disappoint.

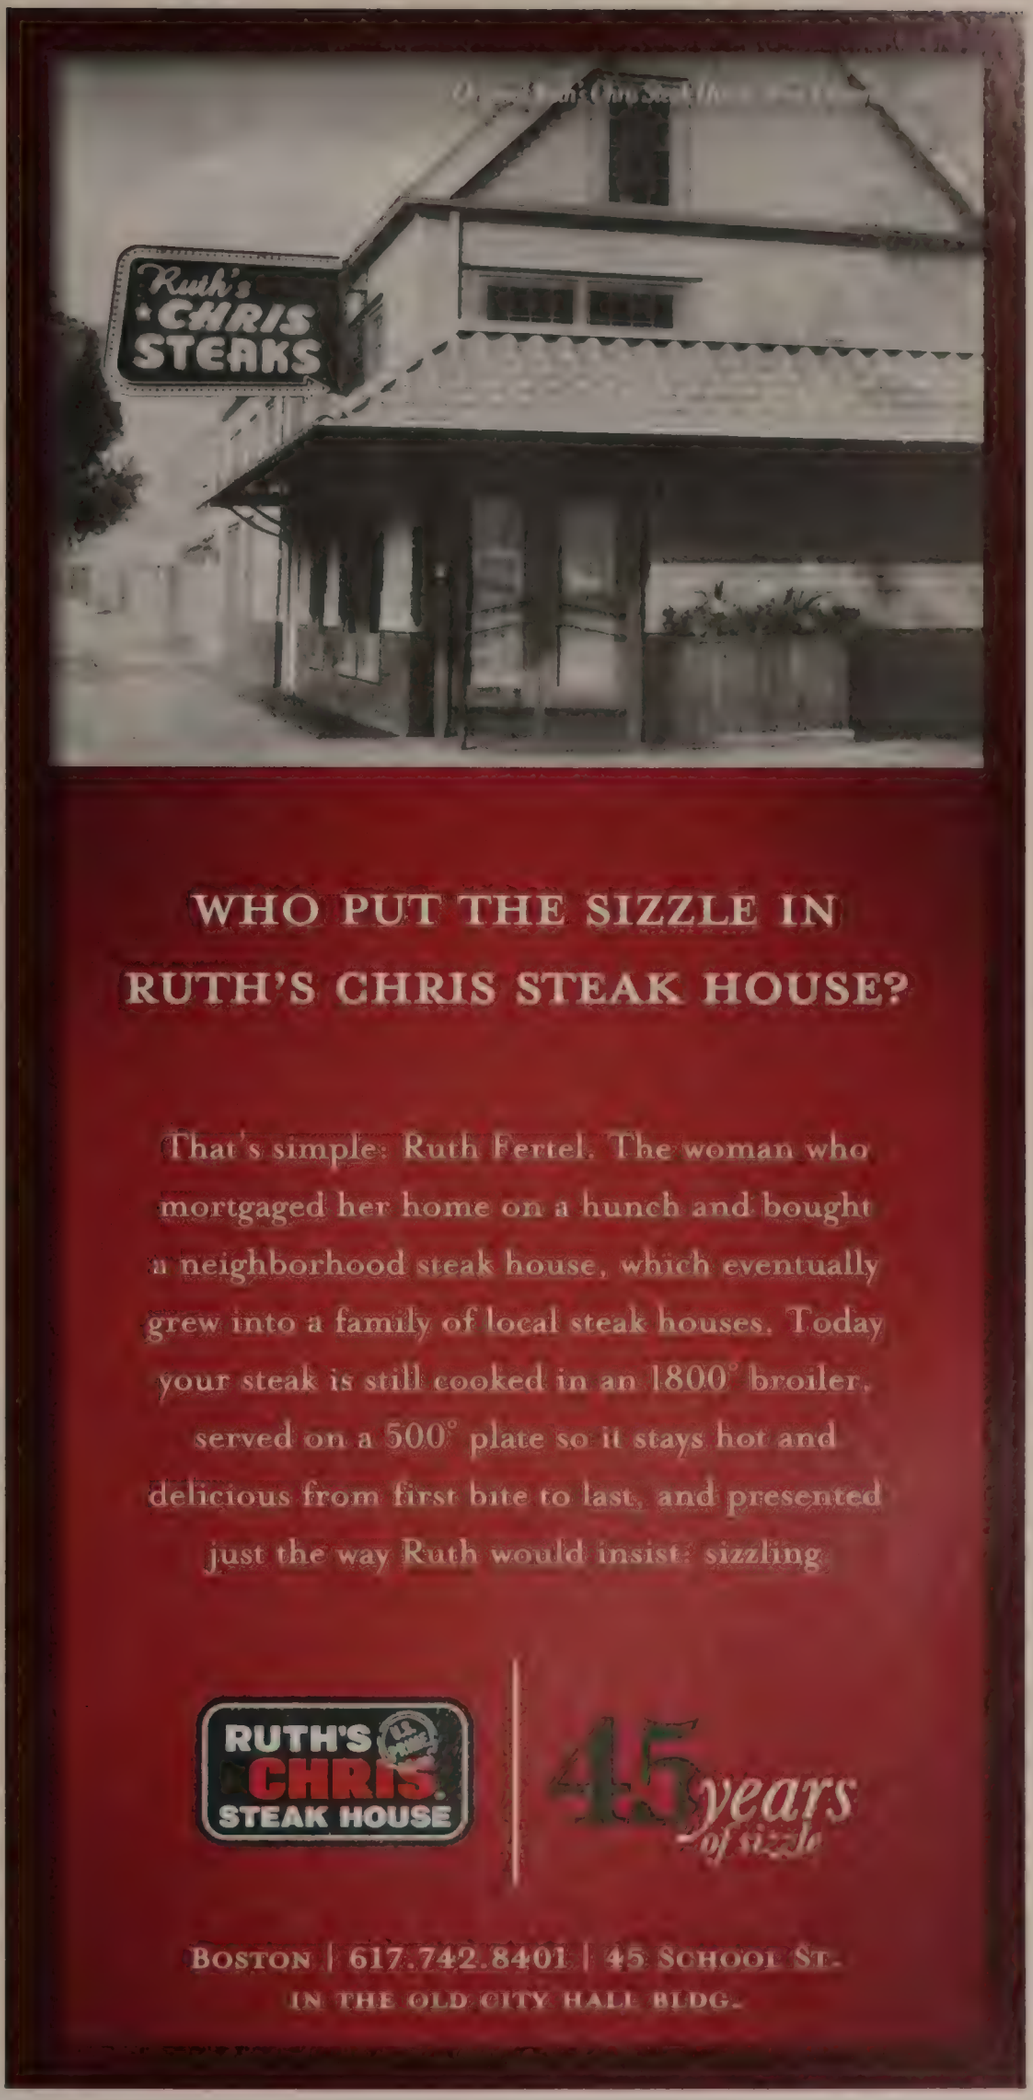
Palet d'Or



The only alternative to the prix fixe—there's no à la carte option—is a seven-course tasting menu ($145). Here, my journey began with a rock-crab salad topped by white sturgeon caviar. Next, I enjoyed seared bluefin tuna on a bed of forbidden rice and Maine lobster tail in a superb butter sauce.

As if to assist the palate in transitioning to dry land, the server brought an unannounced course of cappellacci stuffed with fingerling potatoes and sauced with a morel ragout. Then back on script, I savored a succulent lobe of seared foie gras surrounded by three oversized bing cherries.

The last two courses paled in comparison: Vermont Berkshire pork, slightly tough and dry, but rescued by its mushroom and cabbage base, followed by a veal dish. The Périgueux sauce lent the latter some distinction, but not enough to save it. Fortunately, the tasting menu ended on a high note with a glorious chocolate marquise.

The wine list is extensive, but—no surprise—very expensive. There were few bottles below $50, and the markups were aggressive. Still, there was no gainsaying its quality. A 2007 Parize Givry ($14 for a 5-ounce glass) from Burgundy boasted terrific pinot noir flavor, marvelous bouquet and nice structure, while a 2009 Château de Lascaux Coteaux du Languedoc rosé ($12) combined fruity freshness with good acidity.

My initial skepticism at Menton's cost was quickly dispelled after dining there. Notwithstanding the wine pricing, I derived more pure pleasure from the prix fixe than I'd get from two dinners at most other establishments. This restaurant sets a standard for refinement and quality that matches or exceeds the best of Boston, New York and beyond. ■■■

SUPER SIZE ME

Bigger is better at BJ's.

I LOVE GOING TO NEW GROCERY stores. You get in a rut patronizing your neighborhood store, and in my case, that's always been a Stop & Shop. With all due respect to the former Beacon Hill Stop & Shop—and the current Southie and Quincy locations—ol' S&S doesn't exactly offer a luxury shopping experience. Often, my cooking plans have been stymied when my local outlet didn't carry some exotic ingredient like ginger or cilantro. I recently explored the Whole Foods that replaced the Stop & Shop in Beacon Hill, and the sheer bounty of gourmet excellence made me feel like a Soviet defector from 1985: "Vat is this? Merchant in store will make sandwich fresh, not pre-wrapped in plastic? Finest restaurant in Moscow no offer lobster mac-and-cheese pizza! Glorious America Whole Foods!"

So when a new BJ's opens in Quincy, I decide to check it out. I've never been to one of these club stores, but my mother swears by them. She's always telling me about the great deal she got on some unlikely piece of merchandise that I wouldn't expect they'd have at a place like Costco. For instance, "I bought a new parachute at Costco, and even though I don't skydive, they were only $27 apiece, but you had to buy a 10-pack. So if you know anybody who needs parachutes, I've got a bunch out in the garage, next to the case of snow tires."

My mission at BJ's is simply to buy dinner. I'm not even sure you can do that there, but I sign up for a temporary membership and head into the maw of the beast to find out. BJ's has a rep for selling everything in massive quantities, but when you see it for yourself, you realize that the stereotype isn't exactly accurate. In reality, BJ's sells everything in gargantuan giant enormous massive quantities. Want some plastic forks? How about 700 plastic forks? Or 760 Tootsie Rolls? Or a 20-pound bucket of laundry detergent? BJ's seems aimed at people who're either provisioning ships or shopping for the whole darn cult.

Dinner will be a challenge. All I want to do is grill some meat and veggies, but BJ's doesn't really do single servings. If you're looking for a 14-pound tube of hamburger, you're in the right place. Likewise a 16-pound slab of rib eye. But this isn't à la carte shopping. I spy some intriguing mango-and-jalapeño chicken sausages and decide to give them a try. And hopefully I'll like them, because now I'm committed—they come in a 10-pack. I give up on buns when I can't find anything smaller than a 16-pack. I also score a six-pack of corn. So, only twice as much as I need. I contemplate making a salad before realizing that BJ's produce packages require a salad bowl the size of an above-ground swimming pool.

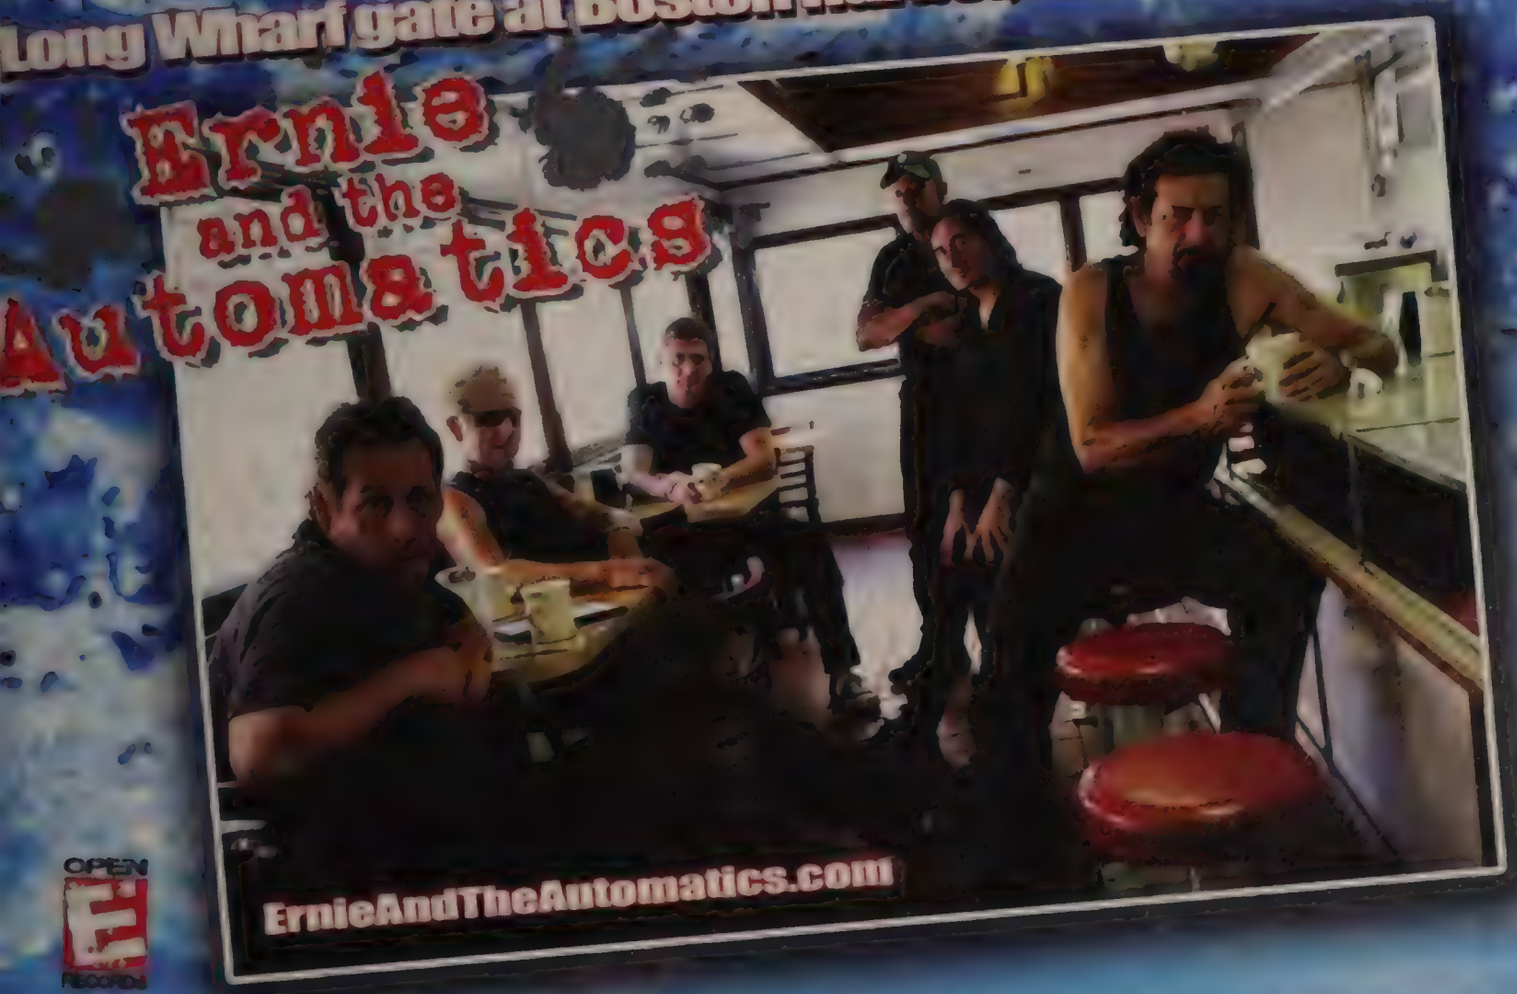
Dinner in hand, I take a spin around the rest of the store to see if there's anything else I need. I'm tempted by the Worcestershire sauce in a two-bottle package—30 ounces in total. (Or, as I call it, a lifetime supply.) I pass on that but grab a bag of Starbucks coffee that I calculate will make about 70 12-ounce cups at 33 cents each. I pick up an eight-pack of toothbrushes—a nice find, because when I drop my toothbrush, it never lands in the sink. It always lands behind the toilet. Or in it.



All in all, I get the BJ's allure if you're looking for prepackaged food or non-perishable items, such as a DVD of the complete first season of Renegade, starring Lorenzo Lamas ($7.99). You can buy just one of those, although I'd understand if you wanted two or three. Contemplating such weighty matters, I'm not paying attention as the cashier rings me up. When I reach my car, I realize that everything I bought is just sitting loose in the shopping cart. I guess you're supposed to grab a few of the free boxes they keep at the front of the store—so you have some way to corral your new treasures. But I didn't know. I didn't realize BJ's has its own rules for the checkout procedure. I feel like a foreigner—one who's ready to defect back to the familiar embrace of the Stop & Shop motherland. At least, until 2013, when I'll need more coffee and toothbrushes. ×××

HISTORY LESSONS

Bill Martin honors the past in his novels.

BILL MARTIN IS THE MOST normal writer you'll ever meet. Not paranoid, not an alcoholic, no multiple divorces. He has exceptionally talented children. Martin loves his wife, and she loves him in return. He's a storyteller. We all learn so much from family stories, comforting, funny, sad. They give us some perspective on ourselves and our roots. I like to remind young people to ask grandparents to share tales from their childhoods. So many are rich with images of a past long gone. You don't want to look back and say, "I should've asked. Now it's too late."

You can learn a lot from Bill Martin. He grew up an only child in mostly Irish West Roxbury. Often, only children turn to fantasy lives, amusing themselves with wonders of their own making. Martin loved cowboys and Indians, knights and damsels in distress, C.S. Forester novels of the sea, Davy Crockett and Disney on TV, tales of WWII battles. He can quote the first 10 minutes of Spencer Tracy's narration in How the West Was Won. By age 12, Martin knew he wanted to spend his life telling big stories as a movie director, holding his camera high and swooping down to, say, Custer's last stand or the Alamo.

He had good training at home. His paternal grandfather lived in a wooden tenement in the South End, where the family—uncles, brothers, sisters, cousins—liked to gather. People who didn't have much told tales of gangsters, bootleggers, bookies and fancy women. Meanwhile, his maternal grandfather was a Boston cop. He was drenched by a fire hose in midwinter and trekked all the way to Brighton, a walking icicle. He died of pneumonia as a result. The tales were filled with drama, inspiring the young Martin, a veritable sponge. His grandmother came from Lithuania. When she arrived on a boat and saw the Statue of Liberty for the first time, she asked a man, "Who's that?"

"It's Columbus," he answered, "and he's holding up a loaf of bread." Hunger had been a way of life for everyone on that ship. Martin's grandmother and her parents settled in Brighton, where meatpacking was a big business. A bright little girl, she was asked to be a court interpreter for all the Litvaks, who were brought in drunk to the police station and needed someone to understand their language and to spin out their stories in English. She was 10 years old.

So childhood gave Martin his dream, to tell his own stories, but with roots in the past. Mentors, if we're lucky, give us a push in certain directions. Martin had mentors at every crucial stage of his life, including Monsignor Lally, who edited the Catholic newspaper, The Pilot. Lally gave Martin his first typewriter. Others nudged him further: an English teacher at Catholic Memorial and William Alfred, Harvard's famous playwright. "But you have to keep delivering to them," Martin told me. "It's not a vacuum. I was always bringing them my writing to see, and I think I just wore them down." Lessons for all you young people with dreams. First, have that dream. Second, show others that you mean it, that you have that fire in your belly.

After college, Martin went to USC film school, wanting to be another David Lean, who directed Dr. Zhivago and Bridge on the River Kwai. But a screenwriters' strike put movie-making on hold, and Martin's agent said, "Do you have any novel ideas?" His novel idea turned into the bestseller Back Bay, and it set the tone for seven more hits, including Cape Cod, Annapolis, Citizen Washington and Harvard Yard. "You need experience with how human beings act in order to write," Martin says. "But I really believe that you shouldn't then write what you know, the novelist should write what he wants to find out." He goes on, "So you can create Washington's crossing of the Delaware on Christmas night, 1776, and then his rise from defeat."

There's more: "Early hard work is my advice to all young people. An uncle got me a summer job in college working with him on the brickwork of an office tower in Boston. We called it 'the pregnant building,' with a bulge in the middle. I'll never forget sunrises on high steel, swinging your legs out during coffee breaks over the city. Magical. Of course, twice I almost got killed up there. That resonates as well. But the hard work, from the top of that building to the lobby, prepared me for the hard bumps later in life."

His tough bricklaying uncle used to harangue him. "'I'm just a union guy,' he'd say. 'But I can motivate the troops. It's important to get in front of people and get your thoughts out. I want you to be a politician, and you have to be a communicator to lead.'" Martin paused. "But I chose to be a storyteller."

And so he's brought us his newest novel, City of Dreams, and, in timely fashion, it's really about the history of money and credit in America. With eternal lessons buried in the adventures and mystery therein. Did you know that Wall Street was named after a wall built to keep the Indians at bay? Did you know that $100 in U.S. government bonds issued when Alexander Hamilton was Secretary of the Treasury, with five percent interest compounding for 230 years, would be $1.4 billion today? If you discovered such bonds, they'd be worth killing over. That's the core of Martin's mystery in the novel. Something that mattered to our ancestors matters today: credit, fear and greed, money and debt. Just like now. Martin says, "And if our ancestors could get past those revolutionary times and survive, we can as well." ▪▪▪

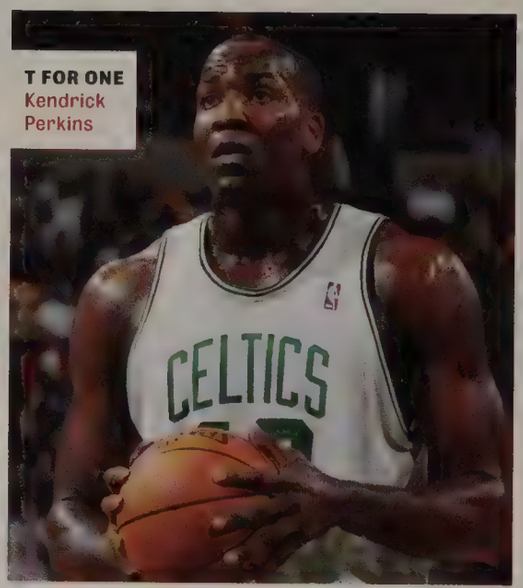
ON PERK, WES, MANNY AND MOSS



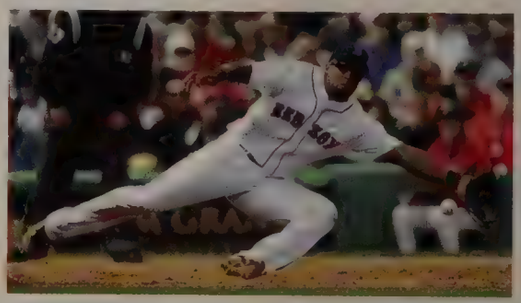
5 FINALS PREDICTIONS

Seven Deadly Techs
The odds of Kendrick Perkins making it through the Finals without another technical foul are about as good as me getting through this column without cracking another tired Tiger Woods joke. Bottom line: At some point, Perk's getting a T, and subsequently, sitting out a game. Can the Celtics survive? Sure, but (gulp) stay warm, Shelden.

Bryant Blows Up
DWade did it. LeBron did it. Vince Carter? Wait, did he actually play against the C's? Either way, like Wade and Bron, Kobe will have at least one superhuman effort in the Finals—I'm thinking 50 points. But, funny thing is, I'm also thinking the C's win the game. Funny? Maybe it's just fitting.

Ray Leads the Way
Rondo's not 100 percent. The Lakers' size will neutralize KG's post game. Between chasing Kobe on one end and Dirty Ron's antics on the other, Pierce will be more frustrated than a chain smoker on a flight to Australia. So, who'll lead the C's in scoring? That'd be Ray Allen—who, by the way, just happens to be playing for the last big contract of his career.

T FOR ONE
Kendrick Perkins



Gasol Will Regress
Two years after playing the Finals with his tail permanently crammed between his legs, the consensus is that Pau Gasol's a changed man. They say he's toughened up. They say he's ready for the NBA's ultimate mental challenge: a battle with KG. I say, no way. Pau might throw up some decent numbers, but when push comes to shove, he'll still end up on his ass.

And the Winner Is
The so-called experts love predicting a series to end in six games. It's a little less cliché than seven; a lot more interesting than four or five. It's a safe bet, but it's also a major cop-out—passive admittance that they're just taking a stab (don't get any ideas, L.A. Times) in the dark. Anyway, my Finals prediction: Celtics in 6.

2 THOUGHTS ON RANDY MOSS

Off the Field
Randy's on the prowl for more endorsement deals after firing his longtime agent for his inability to make stuff happen (as if the lack of offers wasn't a product of Moss himself). Even though he's ready to sell out, you have to wonder who actually wants to buy. I foresee an awkward Sullivan Tire ad in his future.

On the Field
It's a contract year for Moss, and with most players that means increased production. But with 81, there's a twist. He doesn't think the Pats want him after this year. And when Randy feels unwanted, he often flops. Check out his final seasons with Oakland and Minnesota—42 and 40 catches, respectively.

3 Sox Storylines

Leading Off The Sox are finally making it work without Jacoby Ellsbury, but that doesn't alter the sad fact that he's gone. I expected Ellsbury to be the most exciting part of this year; he looked ready to make the leap to "premier leadoff guy." Hell, he even got a real uniform number. But for now, we have to wait (and hope Darnell MacDonald gets interesting again).

Yo, Beltre! It's never easy for a player during his first year with the Red Sox. Especially, when you had a reputation like Adrian Beltre, and fans begin the season just dying to dub you the next Edgar Renteria. But Beltre hasn't budged. He's seamlessly integrated himself into Sox culture and is only getting better.

Yay to Clay With every impressive start, the Buchholz trade talk further slows down, but that doesn't mean it'll die. How can they trade the ace of their staff mid-season, you ask? Because he's the only one who can bring them what they most covet: Adrian Gonzalez. The Sox won't just give him away, but in a deal for A-Gon, Buchholz will B-Gone.

1 ONE SORT-OF SURPRISE

We really thought one little reconstructive surgery could bring down Wes Welker? Ha! [illegible] With the Drunken Stars audition [illegible] but the sight [illegible] sealed the deal. Welker will [illegible] than anyone imagined. Can't believe we ever doubted him.

4 DATES TO WATCH

6/11: The World Cup kicks off in South Africa, and for the first time—maybe ever?—the U.S. team is supposedly pretty good. (I think that means they might finish in the top 10).

6/13: Here's one prediction that can't go wrong: Tonight (Celtics/Lakers, Game 5) will be the last game of the season at TD Garden, aka your final chance to exterminate Aztec Gino and collect the bounty.

6/17: The PGA's best and horniest gather for the 110th annual U.S. Open, where Tiger Woods will look to take down the field at Pebble Beach, or at least a stripper by the same name. (Warned you.)

6/18: It's a bird.... It's a plane.... It's a guy peeing inside the Monster! That's right, Manny Ramirez is back at Fenway, and the question is: Are you gonna boo him? Not me. Yeah, he unforgivably quit on his teammates, but for one standing ovation, I'm willing to forget and simply appreciate the fact that without Manny, the curse currently stands at 92 years.

Soroff On ANTHONY BOURDAIN

The globetrotting chef talks celebrity, sushi and the unholy power of alcohol.

CULINARY ICON ANTHONY BOURDAIN, 53, was born in New York and raised in New Jersey. Bourdain worked in seafood restaurants in Provincetown during college before embarking on the career that made him famous, including his run as executive chef at Brasserie Les Halles. His 2000 tell-all and international bestseller, Kitchen Confidential, sees a follow-up this month in Medium Raw. Other works include his travel diary, A Cook's Tour, three crime novels and a collection of essays. In his spare time, he hosts the Travel Channel's Anthony Bourdain: No Reservations, in which he circumnavigates the globe. He lives in Manhattan with his wife, Ottavia, and their daughter, Ariane.

Jonathan Soroff: Best restaurant you've ever eaten in?
Anthony Bourdain: The finest white-tablecloth restaurant meal I ever had was at French Laundry in Napa Valley.

What's always in your refrigerator at home?
It's all about my daughter, who's three, so I'd say milk, organic cheese singles and… I don't know what… mustard. I always wanted to do a coffee-table book: Refrigerators of Famous Chefs, because I always suspected they were much like mine. Maybe a bottle of vodka, a can of stolen caviar and Chinese takeout from two weeks ago.

Grossest thing about restaurant kitchens?
These days, things are pretty good. People aren't fing on the cutting board anymore or doing rails through uncooked penne like they used to. That sort of thing would be frowned upon.

Did Kitchen Confidential change things?
No. By the time that book came out, the prestige of chefs had really risen a lot. It wasn't a dead-end job anymore. So things are much better now in terms of sanitation and work habits than probably at any time in history. To some extent, I'm sentimental about the bad old days. I hated the open kitchen. That was a terrible development. You couldn't scratch your balls anymore.

Aren't rats and cockroaches inevitable in a city?
Not rats. You do not want rats. That's a serious problem. Cockroaches? That's an ongoing war.

Fakest thing about TV chefs or cooking shows?
Same thing that's fake about every other show. On one hand, you've got people like Gordon Ramsay making schtick out of it. I don't think he really expects any of those idiots to perform well in any kind of professional situation, so I don't see what he's cursing so much for. He wouldn't hire any of these morons at any of his restaurants. On the other extreme, you have people who are watching every word that comes out of their mouths.

Biggest cooking mistake you ever made?
Trying to bake. Tragicomedy will ensue any time I try to bake. I tried to make two wedding cakes, and both times were apocalyptic disasters.

How do you know when everything's going wrong in a restaurant kitchen?
It gets very, very quiet. You're flirting with disaster when everyone's screaming, but it's too late when there's total silence.

At home, do you ever use packaged brands?
No. I'm a big from-scratch guy, and how hard is it to make rice? That's not snobbery. I'm lucky enough to know how to cook, and I like doing it.

Ratatouille*: best movie ever made?*
No. Best movie ever made on the subject of food, though, for sure.

McDonald's or Burger King?
That's like choosing between scabies and chlamydia.

Holiday meal you most like preparing?
Thanksgiving. The standard turkey and stuffing, with all the trimmings—brussels sprouts, pan gravy, cranberry sauce.

Anything you hate to cook?
Eggs Benedict. No matter how degraded and debauched I ever got in my life, I could always get a job cooking brunch. The smell of eggs Benedict is the smell of my most humiliating moments.

Favorite ethnic cuisine?
I love Japanese food. I could eat sushi every day for the rest of my life.

Most important thing if you're cooking at home?
Try not to hack your finger off. Try not to pour hot liquids on genitals. That sort of thing.

Your take on the celebrity chef phenomenon?
Even at its dumbest, it's good for the world. Who's better for society: even the silliest celebrity chef or Kim Kardashian? Chefs, even the worst ones, cook. Stuck on a lifeboat, you'd probably rather have Gordon Ramsay with you than Snooki.

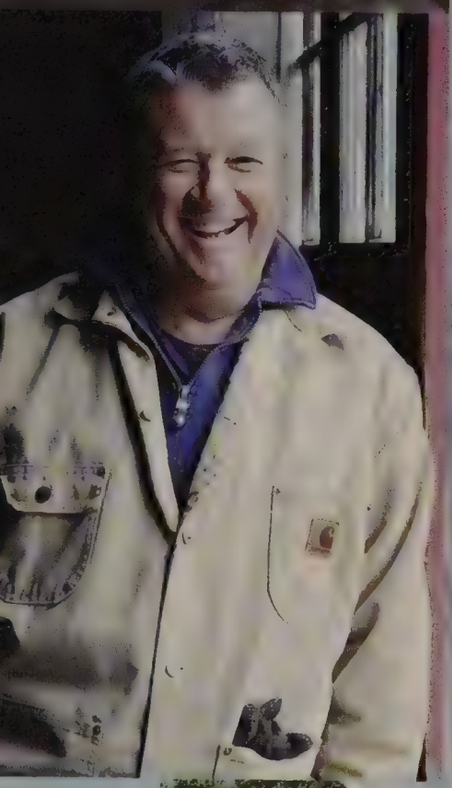
Grossest thing you ever ate?
Fermented shark in Iceland. That was pretty nasty. The business end of a warthog in Namibia was not so great. And, hmmm. Ever had a Cinnabon? They're pretty nasty.

Do food critics have too much power?
As long as they're an honest broker of opinion, it's OK. They should really try hard. But they're less powerful every day with the advent of food bloggers, etc. The only critic I know with the power to open or close a restaurant is The New York Times.

If food is the way to a man's heart, how do you get into his wallet?
Alcohol. I don't believe in the aphrodisiac power of food. I believe in the unholy power of alcohol. Any waiter knows that once the fat cats are liquored up and high-fiving each other, that's the time to suggest a nice glass of cognac or Calvados to jack their check up. Or the whole bottle-service phenomenon. It's the cornerstone of the douchebag economy.

Similarities between writing and cooking?
Writing is a helluva lot easier. You're sitting down. You stop and start when you want. You're not in a submarine-sized space in 110-degree heat, working your ass off.

Anything you'd never cook?
I probably wouldn't make sushi. I'm not so arrogant as to think, that in the limited time left to me, I could learn to make even adequate sushi. Seven years just to learn how to do rice?



If I showed up at your house unannounced, what would you cook for me?
I'd call out for pizza. Or I'd whip up a puttanesca, which was invented for exactly that unexpected visitor situation. Anchovies, capers, Italian plum tomatoes and pasta. That's what you'd get. ▪▪▪

OUT OF THE BOX CHEF WILL GILSON MAKES A WEEK OF MEALS FROM A BOSTON ORGANICS DELIVERY. (WE CHEATED AND GAVE HIM SOME NON-LOCAL PRODUCE.)

WILL DO

WARM ASPARAGUS SALAD WITH SUNNY-SIDE-UP EGG

2 bunches asparagus
4 eggs
4 tablespoons vegetable or olive oil, plus one extra tablespoon olive oil
1 lemon, zest and juice pickled ramps (you can also use pickled baby white onions)
¼ cup toasted garlic vinaigrette (recipe follows)
salt and fresh cracked pepper

1. Boil 2 quarts of salted water in a large pot. Get an ice bath ready.
2. Trim the bottom inch off the asparagus spears and discard. Lower the asparagus into the water and cook for 1 minute, or until they're cooked but remain firm.
3. Remove the asparagus from the water and place in the ice bath to cool and stop the cooking process.
4. Meanwhile, heat a nonstick pan over medium heat. Add 1 tablespoon of oil to the pan per egg and cook yolk up, until the white is set and the yolk remains soft.

5. Remove from heat and set eggs on a separate dish until you're ready to plate the salad.
6. To finish, heat a nonstick pan over medium heat and add the asparagus spears, either diced or whole. Add lemon juice, lemon zest, salt and pepper, along with 1 tablespoon olive oil, then saute the asparagus until they're warmed through.

Divide the asparagus between 4 plates; top each plate with an egg. Drizzle the asparagus with the vinaigrette and either pickled ramps or onions.

TOASTED-GARLIC VINAIGRETTE

¼ cup	garlic, chopped
¼ cup	fresh parsley leaves, chopped
½ cup	sherry vinegar
¾ cup	extra-virgin olive oil
1 teaspoon	sugar
1 teaspoon	salt
½ teaspoon	freshly ground black pepper
2 tablespoons	water

1. Heat olive oil in a sauce pan over low heat.
2. Add chopped garlic and stir continuously until the garlic begins to brown around the edges.
3. Remove pan from heat and add parsley and sherry vinegar. Pour into a blender and pulse until blended. With the machine still running, add sugar, salt, pepper and water.

SIENA FARMS' CHRIS KURTH AND OLEANA'S ANA SORTUN PUT VEGETABLES IN THE CENTER OF THE PLATE.

Ana Sortun, chef/owner of Oleana, talks about seasonal changes to produce in the same way that a butcher might describe different cuts of meat—it's the determining factor in their preparation. "The spring has this characteristic of being very fiesty, spicy, bitter—like asparagus are bitter-sweet. Nettles are really strong flavors," Sortun says. "And then as the summer comes, the heat makes all those flavors mellow. And then you get into using some spices and cooking them a little longer." She's especially proud of the organic greens grown by Siena Farms, located in Sudbury and run by her husband, Chris Kurth. Asked what he enjoys most about the business, Kurth says, "Working with my hands. Learning the craft of growing healthy food." Named after their daughter, the five-year-old farm sources to many local restaurants, including Oleana and Sortun's bakery, Sofra, and operates a stand at the Copley farmers' market twice a week. "Bottom line: The vegetables are super fresh," Sortun says, "so the flavor's two or three times what you'd get in a grocery store."

TOP 5 FARMERS' MARKETS ACCORDING TO PENNY [illegible]

PUBLISHER OF BOSTONZEST.COM AND BOSTON MARKET SCENE REPORTER FOR SERIOUSEATS.COM

1. COPLEY SQUARE, BOSTON Tue. and Fri., 11 am–6 pm. This is my home market, and it's grown into something quite wonderful over the 20 years I've been shopping there.

2. COOLIDGE CORNER, BROOKLINE Beginning June 17. Thu., 1:30–6 pm. It's worth a trip on the Green Line to buy from vendors like Clear Flour Bread, Bob's Turkey Farm and my favorite attraction—Cindy the Fish Lady.

3. THE BOSTON PUBLIC MARKET AT DEWEY SQUARE, BOSTON Tue. and Thu., 11:30 am–6:30 pm. This market represents the hope of many [local] food lovers that we'll one day have a permanent, year-round public marketplace in Boston.

4. HARVARD UNIVERSITY FARMERS' MARKET near Sanders Theatre at the corner of Oxford and Kirkland streets, Cambridge. Beginning June 15. Tue., 12:30–6 pm. Aside from [having an] eclectic mix of vendors, this market is part of Harvard's Food Literacy Project, which helps young people understand the source of [what] they eat.

5. PRUDENTIAL CENTER, BOSTON Thu., 11 am–6 pm. I was thrilled when Boston Properties made space for a third day of fresh and local food in the Back Bay.

FORAGE FIRE

MERITAGE AND ROWES WHARF SEA GRILLE'S DANIEL BRUCE GOES WILD FOR EDIBLES

EXECUTIVE CHEF DANIEL Bruce might be known primarily for founding the Boston Wine Festival, but he's equally passionate about his wild mushrooms. "For mushrooms, I have over 500 different locations. I forage for a lot of mushrooms." He makes between 50 and 70 trips a year, driving up to four hours to harvest more than 29 varietals of mushrooms, among other edibles, like fiddleheads, nettles, ramps and elderberries. "I know all the Latin names of everything I pick. I know the history. I know what they're good for—edibility and also for medicinal reasons," he says matter-of-factly. "I have my wine side. But there's something peaceful about foraging in the woods. It's like hunting, but with no blood."

THE GOOD EARTH

VICTORY PROGRAMS' REVISION URBAN FARM FEEDS A NEED IN DORCHESTER.

In the middle of a neighborhood surrounded by multistory homes, a one-acre farm grows 7,000 pounds of food a year. Victory Programs' ReVision Urban Farm was started in 1993 to help supplement the nutritional needs of the families living in the ReVision Family Home across the street. Although many of the teenage mothers and their children receive government benefits, Tammy Simmons-Dixon, deputy director of Victory Housing, says, "Those resources sometimes run out during the month, so what the farm has been able to do is connect them with the fresh produce that's grown here." Farm manager Matthew Kochka plants based on the residents' preferences. "This community has a rich cultural history—a lot of people here are immigrants," he says. "People are reminded of what their grandmothers used to cook for them, and they're inspired to get back on a diet that's related to their culture." In addition to providing produce to the housing residents, ReVision will start offering CSA shares on June 13 and will open a farm stand on Blue Hill Avenue on July 14. Kochka says, "We squeeze every last bit of food out of this place." ✖✖✖

NICE CATCH

By Erin Byers Murray

Photographs by Michael Piazza

BUYING HOOK-AND-LINE CAUGHT OR DAY-BOAT FISH ALLOWS CONSUMERS TO SOURCE THEIR SEAFOOD TO SMALL SUPPLIERS.

A GAPE-MOUTHED striper flops languidly on its side, staring at an audience of a half-dozen chefs in plain clothes. They wait patiently for the fish to do something flashy. With two hands, Jeremy Sewall raises it chest-high like a prizefighter's belt. "And now, the most famous New England fish to ever exist," he announces dramatically. "The striped bass." The group oohs with admiration.

Sewall, executive chef at Eastern Standard, is teaching Fish School, a casual class created by Island Creek Oysters. Though specializing in bivalves, Island Creek, a local company founded by Skip Bennett, has started selling hook-and-line catch from South Shore angler Mike Lundholm. This summer, Lundholm's fluke, black bass, striper and tautog will reach the city's locavore chefs, some of whom are gathered inside the forthcoming Island Creek Oyster Bar (formerly Great Bay) in Kenmore Square. They've come to meet Lundholm, learn about the fisheries he favors, and pick up a few butchery and cooking tips.

Sewall, also the chef/owner of Lineage and, soon, the oyster bar, slides his knife down the striper's spine, peeling flesh from bone like a surgeon. Chef Tim Wiechmann of T.W. Food leans over, nods at Sewall's handiwork and whispers, "He makes it look really easy." As Sewall butchers, he talks. "Striped bass went through a commercial-fishing moratorium in the '70s and '80s because of depleted supplies," he says. "But this is a great success story. In the late '90s, the commercial industry came back. It's a fishery that's extremely well-managed."

SNAPPY LOBSTER

"Is it managed by quota or poundage?" asks Will Gilson, chef at Garden at the Cellar.

"Both," Lundholm answers shyly. His barely audible voice is telling: He's more comfortable on miles of empty ocean than among a sea of strangers. "We get a million pounds per year, which sounds like a lot, but when you've got a lot of guys fishing, that goes pretty quick," Lundholm explains. He's referring to the state-issued quota for striped bass, which limits a fisherman's catch for the season (the fishery might be open a few weeks or months, depending on volume). For Lundholm, a 20-year veteran, it's not the easiest regulation to abide. Namely, because he's paid by quantity as well as quality. Plus, when the fish are biting, Lundholm says he can catch a hell of a lot more.

Ask him or any of his peers, and they'll tell you that the ocean is a lot bigger than the government thinks.

Ask him what sustainable seafood means, and he'll laugh.

Just by being here, Lundholm, Sewall and Bennett are taking part in an ongoing conversation about sustainable seafood, a conversation I've participated in over the past year. In March 2009, I left a job in journalism to work as a farmhand for Bennett at Island Creek in Duxbury, trading in a keyboard for a pair of boots, hoping to learn first-hand how fish gets from the ocean to the plate.

In between harvesting and mud slinging, I received a crash course in both aquaculture and the state of the industry. Before starting on the farm, I knew enough about seafood practices to avoid eating Chilean sea bass or farm-raised salmon, but I had no idea how fish was being caught a few miles from my Brighton condo. It took quitting my job and getting my hands dirty to find out.

At the consumer end of the spectrum, supervisory efforts include the Monterey Bay Aquarium's Seafood Watch program (and their pocket guides for sustainable choices; seafoodwatch.org) and the Marine Stewardship Council (msc.org), which puts its seal on fish caught in environmentally conscious ways. While these initiatives provide useful resources (I bring both seafood shopping), they've given guys like Lundholm a headache. Then there's the state and federal regulators that follow their reports.

"Take tautog," he tells me during class. Also called blackfish, tautog is a state-managed fishery with an annual quota monitored by the Massachusetts Division of Marine Fisheries. "They monitor it with a drag boat and a net, but these fish live in rocks and caves. How can you drag a net over all those rocks and get an honest number?" he says dumbfounded. "I understand they have to be cautious since these are a really slow-growing fish. But there are a lot more out there than we're allowed to catch. That's lost money."

His point speaks to the challenges of protecting resources without hurting an industry and losing jobs. The governing bodies see their role as ensuring there'll be fish to catch now and in the future, explains Peter Baker, manager of the New England Fisheries Campaign for Pew Environment Group. "Fishermen are going to say that the best manager of their fishery is the one who lets them catch the most and make the most money," Baker says. "But if they want to continue to fish, that's not the best long-term strategy. There has to be a place for the people in this process." For the New England Fisheries Campaign, that means monitoring catch limits and organizing more community-based, fishermen-run co-ops.

The idea is to help preserve both the stocks and the people who make a living by them, but the industry isn't there yet. Articles predict the end of seafood in 50 years. Fortunately, it's not all bad news: According to the New England Fishery Management Council, some species of cod and flounder are at their highest levels in 30 years. Still, more than half of the groundfish stocks available in New England are overfished. Such statistics lead to even tighter restrictions, like one federal mandate that recently limited certain catch amounts. That could translate to a huge loss for the state's small-boat fishing fleet, industry experts say.

If there's a silver lining, it's the group I'm with today—chefs who're willing to pay for hook-and-line caught or day-boat fish from small, independent suppliers. The decision allows them to fill their menus with consciously sourced food while putting money directly into the pockets of hard-working locals. Consumers are helping, too, thanks to programs like Cape Ann Fresh Catch. Similar to a vegetable CSA, this community-supported fishery delivers North Shore–caught, day-boat fish directly to its subscribers. "Our subscribers pay us four dollars per pound. Two dollars and 50 cents goes right into the fisherman's pocket. Some days, that's much higher than what they'll get on the market," explains Angela Sanfilippo, who helped found the program.

Consumers benefit as well. "Accountability gets lost as soon as your fish gets lumped in with everyone else's," Bennett says about the wholesale markets. By selling directly to a program like Island Creek or Cape Ann Fresh Catch, fishermen "want to do everything they can to make sure theirs is the highest quality."

That quality comes at a price, but the chefs at Fish School see it as a fin-to-tail opportunity. As they wrap up class tasting chunks of steamed fluke and fried tautog, Wiechmann, Gilson and Sewall swap ideas on how to cook the whole animal. "You can make ceviche from the tail meat. Or a fried fish cheeks special," Sewall suggests.

"I'd use the bones to do a fumet, or you can steam the head and take the meat out," Wiechmann adds.

At Garden at the Cellar, Gilson likes to marinate and serve whole bass collars.

Sewall says the fish he's getting is worth the cost. "It's coming right from the source, it's bled on the boat, and the meat is a better quality than what I might get from a big supplier," he explains, adding, "We're getting a better product." The same goes for diners. Whether it's a fumet at T.W. Food or, later this summer, fried fish cheeks at Island Creek Oyster Bar, I'll rest easier knowing my neighborhood restaurant is supporting guys like Lundholm. Sourcing my fish to locals means I can eat well—without getting my hands dirty. ✖✖✖

Black Sea Bass with Summer Corn Salad

BY JEREMY SEWALL Serves 4

4 ears fresh corn
3 tablespoons olive oil
2 shallots, sliced
1 small white onion, sliced
1 leek, washed and sliced into ¼-inch rounds
1 small potato, peeled and chopped
½ cup heavy cream

3 ears fresh corn
1 cup fava beans, blanched and peeled
1 cup fennel, thinly sliced
½ cup red onion, thinly sliced
1 tablespoon lemon juice
2 tablespoons olive oil
5 large basil leaves

4 7-ounce black sea bass filets (skin on, about 3 inches thick)
4 ounces canola oil
salt and pepper

1. Shave kernels off each corn cob, set aside. Put shaved cobs in a pot and cover with cold water. Bring to a simmer and cook for 30 minutes. Strain and reserve the liquid, discarding the cobs.

2. In a large skillet, heat olive oil over medium heat. Add shallots, onion, leek and potato, and cook for about 5 minutes or until softened. Add the corn kernels and cook for 3 minutes, stirring frequently, until vegetables are translucent.

3. Add reserved stock to the vegetables covering everything by one inch. Bring to a simmer and cook for 10 minutes. Add heavy cream and continue simmering for 10 minutes. Remove from heat and let cool at room temperature.

4. Place mixture in a blender and puree until smooth. Add salt and pepper to taste; strain and return sauce to saucepan. Keep warm over low heat.

5. Meanwhile, light a grill. Brush 3 ears of corn with olive oil and grill until lightly browned. Let cool before shaving kernels off the cob. (If you don't have a grill, sauté kernels in olive oil over medium heat for about 30 seconds).

6. Place cooked kernels, fava beans, fennel and red onion in a bowl, add lemon juice and olive oil, and toss to combine. Just before serving, tear basil leaves into small pieces and toss with the salad. Season with salt and pepper.

7. Preheat oven to 350 degrees. Season the flesh of the bass with salt and pepper.

8. In a large, ovenproof skillet, heat canola oil over high heat. Add bass, skin-side down, and sear over high heat, 1-2 minutes. Turn down to medium and heat until skin is crisp.

9. Place the skillet in the oven and bake until just cooked through, about 6 minutes.

10. Remove fish from oven (skin should be colored and crisp but not burnt).

11. On each of four plates, add 2 tablespoons of reserved sauce. Divide corn salad over sauce and place the bass on top, skin-side up. Serve immediately.

Cocktails perfect for summer entertaining.

NAME: Bruce Franklin AGE: 23

JOB: Co-owner of Robot & Brucling

NEIGHBORHOOD: Mattapan

Fall is my favorite season to dress for. I like to layer a lot. When I wake up in the morning, I don't go with what the weather is—I go with how I feel.

[At Robot & Brucling] we sew, sketch and are self-taught.

Some people say we "reinvented" the bow tie. Really, we just made it our own because we couldn't find what we were looking for in stores. We just took it to the next level.

This jacket originally had sleeves, but I turned it into a vest. I get a lot of stuff tailored.

My business partner, Chris, and I almost got beat up in N.Y. recently because of how we were dressed. A lot of people compliment, but we get the other side, too—the laughter.

A Kiss Is Still a Kiss

Something Old Finally, a romantic comedy that tests the hackneyed notion that it's what's inside that counts. On a young couple's wedding day, an elderly man kisses the bride, inadvertently switching their souls. Sure, the groom just promised to have and to hold her no matter what, and yes, beauty is only skin deep, but what happens when that skin is slack and covered in liver spots? Find out if love knows no bounds in Prelude to a Kiss, running through June 13 at the BU Theatre. Domenica Cerasaro

Babies ★ ½ We get it, they're cute. Enough already. Lacking narrative, dialogue or really anything a reasonable person might expect when plunking down $10 to see a movie, Thomas Balmes' pseudo-documentary is just a lot of shots of babies acting like… babies. They coo; they warble; sometimes they cry. End of plot synopsis. Spending about a year or so following four tots from Mongolia, Namibia, Tokyo and San Francisco, the movie simply shows kids doing what they do. I guess the locations are meant to hint at some universal truth, like perhaps cultural and geographic differences don't matter all that much when you're a barely-sentient newborn. This rainbow coalition of cute kids behaves identically. They're all adorable until they get hungry or have to go to the bathroom. They're also boring. Spending time with babies you know can be a moment-to-moment journey of discovery and joy. But not when they're strangers. This isn't a movie. It's a screensaver. (At Coolidge Corner, Harvard Square and Stuart Street Playhouse.)

Clash of the Titans ★ ½ The original 1981 Clash of the Titans might've been a silly, turgid film, but at least it had an endearing campiness. The remake is all business, as one scene even trashes the previous picture's robot owl sidekick as a symbolic gesture. Sam Worthington, who also starred in Terminator: Salvation and Avatar without displaying a single personality trait, plays Perseus, the demigod illegitimate son of Zeus who takes on the heavens in a holy war. Worthington faces some arbitrary tasks, whose random rules are explained by other characters just seconds before the battle begins. Things drone on like a video game, with Perseus defeating one generic monster after another, and then starting over from scratch in the very next scene. This new Clash is so flat and by the numbers, it actually made me long for that annoying robot owl. (In the suburbs.)

Date Night ★★ As the writing in TV comedies grows more sophisticated and edgy, its big-screen competition keeps sliding backward. Proof of this sad fact, director Shawn Levy's latest strands Steve Carell and Tina Fey, two of TV's smartest, funniest performers/writers, in a tedious slog that feels so much like one of those 1980s Touchstone Pictures remakes of French farces, it probably should've starred Steve Guttenberg and Shelley Long. Playing a boring New Jersey couple who steal a reservation at a trendy Manhattan eatery, Carell and Fey end up involved in a convoluted mistaken-identity scenario that leaves them on the run from crooked cops and Ray Liotta's spaghetti-slurping Mafioso. The two stars ad-lib as hard as they can, assisted by a sly, self-mocking supporting turn from Mark Wahlberg. But there's no escaping the fundamental lameness of Josh Klausner's screenplay, and Levy seems to think we've come to a Carell and Fey vehicle for the car chases. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Exit Through the Gift Shop ★★★★ This remarkable, hilarious documentary from the secretive British street artist known only as Banksy begins as a slightly tedious story of an underground movement. Eccentric tagalong dilettante Thierry Guetta spent years chronicling the creation of spray-paint stencils that appeared on public walls from artists like Shepard Fairey and Banksy himself. But just when you think you've settled in for a routine hipster hagiography, Exit Through the Gift Shop implodes in spectacular fashion, as Banksy seizes control of the project from the incompetent director, and Guetta responds by setting the fickle art world on its ear with a million-dollar triumph of hype over substance. (This is the Adaptation of art documentaries.) Many are wondering if this is all a hoax, but if Exit Through the Gift Shop's droll, insistent provocations leave you asking questions about the thin line between artistic accomplishment and media manipulation, then it only rings more true. (At Kendall Square and West Newton Cinema.)

The Ghost Writer ★★★ ½ It's not my job to weigh in on Roman Polanski's personal issues. Sure, I'd never let him within a mile of my underage cousins, but The Ghost Writer is such a superlative example of craftsmanship that I walked out of the theater on a cloud. Adapted from Robert Harris' novel, this is a humdrum potboiler polished to a very fine sheen. Ewan McGregor gives his least-offensive performance in years as a hack writer assigned to wrestle the unwieldy memoirs of a transparent Tony Blair stand-in (strikingly well-played by Pierce Brosnan) into something publishable. What matters isn't the plot but the air of malevolence that Polanski brings to every seemingly innocuous conversation. He creates suspense without cutting, positioning the camera

This comedy pushes the limits, but doesn't know when to stop.

Get Him to the Greek ★★
Starring Russell Brand, Jonah Hill, Sean Combs, Elisabeth Moss, Rose Byrne, Carla Gallo and Lars Ulrich. Written and directed by Nicholas Stoller. Based on characters created by Jason Segel.

Glenn Wilson

BRITISH BAD-BOY COMEDIAN Russell Brand made his American breakthrough in 2008's Forgetting Sarah Marshall. As rock star Aldous Snow, Brand mined narcissism for massive laughs and added a surprising streak of kindness to a character that, in lesser hands, might've been a cardboard scoundrel. But let's face it: A little of this guy goes a long way. If Hannibal Lecter couldn't carry his own movie, what hope is there for Aldous Snow?

Nicholas Stoller's Get Him to the Greek isn't technically a sequel to Forgetting Sarah Marshall. Jonah Hill plays a different character this time around, and Snow's backstory has been significantly rewritten. As for poor Sarah Marshall, she's forgotten, literally. Watching one of her TV commercials, Aldous can only vaguely remember having sex with her. The biggest departure, however, is one of tone. You won't find the previous picture's gentle, inclusive spirit here. Get Him to the Greek is defiantly unpleasant, aggressive and gross. It's amusing at times, but an icky aftertaste lingers.

Hill costars as schlubby record company staffer Aaron Green, who spends his days absorbing insults from his tyrannical boss (a monstrously funny Diddy) and his tedious nights at home with his perpetually exhausted girlfriend (Elisabeth Moss). She's just decided that they're moving to Seattle without consulting him. But before Green can even argue he gets the assignment of his dreams: babysitting his idol, Aldous Snow, on a road trip from London to L.A. for a comeback concert at the Greek Theatre.

Snow's legend has been tarnished as of late. His latest single, "African Child," was blasted by critics as "the worst thing to happen to Africa since apartheid." Greek opens with the title-track's video, a scathing send-up of celebrity do-gooderism that's bound to make Bono cringe. Snow's wife dumped him for Lars Ulrich, and he's fallen off the wagon in spectacular fashion. Getting him to gigs on time ain't as easy as it used to be.

There's something smug about the film's commitment to vulgarity.

So the admiring young Green finds himself in a drug-addled, sexually deviant remix of the great 1982 comedy My Favorite Year. The film is a ramshackle collection of increasingly outré set-pieces revolving around booze, vomit, narcotics and ladies of questionable moral standards. Most scenes seem to feature an object shoved into Green's rectum, proving once again that anal penetration is comedy's new kick in the balls. (I sat through Greek and MacGruber back-to-back, and haven't seen so much rear-entry since the Crisco scene in Cruising.)

As the hapless company man, Hill tones down his trademark bluster and finds a nice passive-aggressive groove. Brand once again brings the smarm, but predictably enough, Snow isn't as fun in a leading role. Giving the character daddy issues isn't enough to make us pity this poor millionaire. And like most comedies from the Judd Apatow factory, Get Him to the Greek reverts to third-act sentimentality, complete with pat speeches extolling the values of sobriety and monogamy.

I'm usually a sucker for Apatow's formula, but I wasn't buying it here. As if determined to smash all the boundaries pushed by The Hangover last year, Greek spends too much time trying to exceed the limits. There's something smug about the film's commitment to vulgarity. It even plays Snow's heroin habit for cheap giggles, which is rather queasy since Brand has publicly struggled with his own addictions.

This nightmare of depravity predictably culminates in Las Vegas, the vilest city in America. Presenting a place where dreams go to die and all women are dim receptacles, Stoller stages a genuinely transgressive sequence in which his entire cast freaks out on a potentially lethal combo of smack, meth and skanks. The lovely actress Carla Gallo, who you might remember as "Period Girl" in Superbad, continues her streak of onscreen sexual humiliations with a few surprises unfit for print. Diddy's volcanic, heroically profane meltdown makes the segment something special to behold. But the outrageous setup makes it that much harder for the film to double back to "family values" piety.

Maybe it's just because Moss can't shake her Peggy Olson Mad Men vibe, but I'm still not exactly sure how a finale of Snow performing cunnilingus on her as Green watches is supposed to salvage their dysfunctional relationship. It's yet another one of Get Him to the Greek's I-can't-believe-they-went-there moments that leave you wondering why, in fact, they chose to go there in the first place. ✖✖✖ slightly off-axis for long takes that induce a sense of overwhelming dread. There's a casual elegance to these compositions, and Polanski displays an old-school command of the medium. Not a great story, but they just don't make 'em like this anymore. (At Kendall Square and West Newton Cinema.)

Greenberg ★★★ ½ That person you wanted to be in your 20s is embarrassing at age 40. Writer-director Noah Baumbach, who helmed such cringe-fests as The Squid and the Whale and Margot at the Wedding, hits squirm-overdrive with this tale of a maladjusted rebel house-sitting in L.A. while his brother's family tours Vietnam. Adrift in poolside ennui, Ben Stiller's Roger Greenberg seethes and insults according to ancient reflexes, alienating those around him for maximum discomfort. He doesn't understand adult notions of compromise and turns all his interior self-loathing and disappointment outward against the world. His character is unbearable, but the attitude comes from someplace genuinely painful. Only his brother's hapless 20-something assistant, played brilliantly by the bewitching Greta Gerwig, can break through Greenberg's armor of sarcastic aggression. She's too good for him, but you'll root for them to get together all the same. (In the suburbs.)

How to Train Your Dragon ★★★ This is an unusually adorable CGI adventure from DreamWorks Animation, best known for the noxious Shrek series. Jay Baruchel voices a stumblebum Viking named Hiccup who aches to befriend dragons instead of slay them. Much to the chagrin of his Hagar the Horrible–looking dad (Gerard Butler, in his first tolerable movie), our young hero spends the bulk of the film cozying up to a moody creature nicknamed Toothless and teaching kids a valuable lesson about kindness conquering aggression. The story is a familiar one, with echoes of Avatar during the vertiginous 3-D flying sequences. But the movie is disarmingly sweet and strikingly well-crafted. Directors Dean DeBlois and Chris Sanders were responsible for Disney's charming 2002 oddity Lilo & Stitch. This one doesn't feel quite as fresh, but it gets the job done with rousing action sequences and a great orchestral score by John Powell. (In the suburbs.)

Iron Man 2 ★★ ½ This overstuffed and underdeveloped sequel to 2008's smash juggles at least four separate plot-lines, which wastes enormous amounts of our time piling on new characters and setting up so many potential sequels and spin-offs, the movie has no chance to tell a coherent story of its own. But personality goes a long way, and while still a colossal disappointment, Iron Man 2 at least offers the small pleasures of a ridiculously overqualified cast riffing off one another, whenever their clunky CGI suits aren't getting in the way. With the movie in his back pockets, a swaggering Robert Downey Jr. once again stars as drunken, narcissistic playboy Tony Stark. He's got some delightful screwball banter with Gwyneth Paltrow and a worthy nemesis in steely-eyed, monosyllabic Mickey Rourke. Sam Rockwell and Garry Shandling bring on superlative smarm, but this time around director Jon Favreau lets sequel-itis and thudding heavy metal drown out the zingers. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Kick-Ass ★★★ The superhero movie for people who are sick of superhero movies, Matthew Vaughn's latest is a rude blast of rancid attitude and giddy, remorseless violence. This has some critics outraged, but Kick-Ass strikes me as entirely too silly to be cause for alarm. It's just a hell of a lot of fun, giving a well-deserved wedgie to Hollywood's recent glut of solemn, costumed avenger epics. Aaron Johnson plays the title character, a dorky teenage fanboy fed up with the world's injustices who takes to the streets attempting to fight crime. But lurking in the shadows are Big Daddy (Nicolas Cage) and Hit-Girl (Chloe Grace Moretz), a brutally efficient father-daughter team of bloodthirsty vigilantes. He walks around in a Batman costume; she's 11. At almost two hours, the film feels a bit windy. And yet the over-the-top finale is so boisterous, kinetic and just plain wrong that I laughed. God help me, I laughed. (In the suburbs.)

Contrived Comedy

Heroism for Idiots

Will Forte saves the day in MacGruber. Save $10 and go see something else.

MacGruber ★★ Based on a Saturday Night Live sketch that barely holds its own at 90 seconds, this wan send-up of 1980s movie tropes suffers from a wheezy, been-there-done-that vibe. The movie feels like the sad afterbirth of VH1's I Love the '80s, as the entire point of this enterprise seems to be mocking the fads of previous decades. There's nothing here that Trey Parker and Matt Stone's Team America: World Police didn't do better, and several jokes have been brazenly shoplifted. Will Forte and Kristen Wiig mug desperately for our attention, but it's the supporting cast that shows an odd sort of comic genius. Powers Boothe, Ryan Phillippe and baddie Val Kilmer play this nonsense hilariously straight, uttering clichés with a stilted precision familiar from Reagan-era action flicks. The straight lines are so much funnier than the jokes; it's like watching a Marx Brothers movie in which Margaret Dumont gets all the laughs. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Mother and Child ★ ½ Writer/director Rodrigo García, son of Nobel Prize–winner Gabriel García Márquez, has carved a niche for himself helming soapy, slightly ridiculous melodramas featuring great actresses and gorgeous lighting. Pictures like Things You Can Tell Just by Looking at Her and Nine Lives boast strong performances in the service of absurd clichés. Mother and Healthy Choice Most food documentaries beat you over the head with inhumane practices and bad eating habits. Fresh focuses on realistic resolutions. With the help of leading businesspeople, thinkers and farmers, filmmaker Ana Sofia Joanes demonstrates how to make sustainability the norm, not the exception. See her vision on June 18 at the Brattle Theatre.

Domenica Cerasaro

Child is more of the same, but with the volume cranked up to 11. Annette Bening plays a sobbing train wreck who spends every waking moment obsessing about the daughter she gave up for adoption 37 years ago. A shockingly good Naomi Watts stars on a parallel track as her abandoned offspring, now a careerist man-eater. Yet another plot line follows Kerry Washington seeking to adopt the child of Half Nelson's disconcertingly grown-up Shareeka Epps. There's a lot of New Age music while hardened, interesting characters learn how to give up their dreams and idiosyncrasies to become dull, doting mommies. The final flourish of absurd coincidences makes 2004's risible Crash seem subtle. (At Kendall Square and Waltham Embassy.)

A Nightmare on Elm Street ★ Here's another morally and intellectually bankrupt film from Michael Bay's Platinum Dunes horror-remake factory. Though described as a child killer in writer/director Wes Craven's original 1984 picture, we were always left to assume that Freddy Krueger was up to other things with the Elm Street kids. This version leaves out the ambiguity. It's telling of the filmmakers' diseased mindset that the only aspect of the story they choose to elaborate on is the history of Freddy's child molestation tactics. Upping the ante with sick flashbacks and shots of crying preschool girls with razor-fingernail scratches on their backs doesn't in any way enrich this particular saga. Giving Freddy a lair full of perverted Polaroids does nothing to make A Nightmare on Elm Street any scarier. It just makes the whole enterprise feel sick and tawdry, reminding you how wise Craven was to steer clear of that side of the story in the first place. (In the suburbs.)

Please Give ★★★ ½ Miles from the rancid, materialist chick-flicks that dominate the marketplace right now, writer/director Nicole Holofcener's films tend to favor behavior over plot. They work their way toward tiny epiphanies that feel grounded and true-to-life. Nothing much happens, but everything changes. Please Give is Holofcener's strongest picture since her offhandedly-brilliant debut Walking and Talking and stars Catherine Keener in a role that shouldn't be remotely sympathetic. Except Keener is one of the great actresses of our time and is able to convey untold vulnerability even while saying exactly the wrong thing at the worst possible moment. As a liberal, guilt-ridden Manhattan antiques dealer making a fortune on dead people's furniture, Keener is a flurry of rationalizations, overcompensations and random crying spells. Her desperate attempts at volunteer work come to hilarious, sometimes poignantly disastrous ends, as she slowly learns the difference between "compassion" and "pity." It's a deeply unflattering role, yet Keener is never less than captivating. (At Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and Waltham Embassy.)

Robin Hood ★★ Maybe the Kevin Costner version wasn't so bad after all? Ridley Scott's mega-budget prequel is a dreary slog through the aftermath of King Richard's crusade and has almost nothing to do with the tale upon which it's purportedly based. This is a glum saga where everyone acts sad, powerless and smelly between the pseudo-Braveheart skirmishes Scott tends to fall back on these days. And you can count on one hand the number of times Robin Hood fires his trademark bow and arrow. He's just another sad-sack with a sword caught up in historical intrigue, as if Scott decided to secretly make a sequel to his lousy Crusades epic Kingdom of Heaven and weasel it into production by calling it Robin Hood. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

The Runaways ★★ ½ Dakota Fanning is all grown up. In case you had any doubt, director Floria Sigismondi's cheerfully trashy biopic about the 1970s girl group begins with a shot of Fanning's menstrual blood hitting the pavement on the Sunset Strip. Charting the rise and fall of these queens of noise by studiously embracing every stale cliché from every rock 'n' roll movie ever made, The Runaways is more of a kick than it has a right to be. There's an agreeable, lurid energy, as Sigismondi fully embraces the female empowerment/leering-at-jailbait contradictions that made the band such a sensation… at least in Japan. Fanning vamps it up as Cherie Currie, the original riot grrl who couldn't handle the drugs and adulation. Michael Shannon steals scenes as abusive manager Kim Fowley. But the movie belongs to Kristen Stewart's Joan Jett. Nailing Jett's hunched strut and snarled delivery, Stewart adds a layer of vulnerability. Add an extra star if you enjoy seeing teenage girls in their underwear. (In the suburbs.)

Sex and the City 2 ★ "Shoes, money, outfits, shoes, vagina, money, shoes, jewelry, outfits, money, shoes." That's pretty much all I got out of this two-and-a-half-hour barrage of fetishized luxury items, crass behavior and materialism sadly misconstrued as female empowerment. After the redundant, happily-ever-after endings of both the TV program and the first movie, there's no reason for this sequel to exist besides money. So I guess it's fitting that Sex and the City 2 is about how ridiculously freaking rich these people are. Instead of a story, we watch the gals vacationing at a $22,000-a-night Abu Dhabi resort. Little occurs besides costume changes, and the movie periodically stops dead in its tracks for lengthy itemizations of the products on display. It's a cartoon Middle East, where women wear the latest haute couture beneath their burkas and mean, old religious dudes get huffy over Carrie and her entourage tramping around their city with their aging, leathery cleavages hanging out. The worldview is toxic and the excess so wretched that this feels like a Transformers movie for greedy, middle-aged slatterns. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Shrek Forever After ★ ½ I can't believe I've sat through four Shrek movies. The things I do for you people! With its bare-bones animation—the empty backgrounds bearing the distinct stink of a direct-to-DVD sequel—this latest desultory slog attempts to reboot the series by positing an It's a Wonderful Life scenario. Mike Myers' charmless ogre gets fed up with all the burping, farting and pooping by his babies and longs for the more solitary existence of his old, undomesticated life. Dastardly Rumpelstiltskin (voiced by in-house animator Walt Dohrn, allowing you to hear cost-cutting measures in full effect) shows the titular ogre what life would be like were he never born, sending him off to wander around a blighted, dystopian Far Far Away. Shrek has to meet everybody all over again, an implicit acknowledgment that there's nowhere else to go with these characters except to start the entire series over from scratch. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Survival of the Dead ★★ ½ George Romero's sixth zombie apocalypse is poorly acted, roughly plotted and boasts some of the worst cowboy costumes since the Carol Burnett Show neckerchiefs featured in Tombstone. But it's got some smart ideas at its core, and I can't think of any other fifth sequel that feels so fresh or so willing to explore new possibilities within a tired genre. It sometimes seems like one of those goofy Star Trek episodes where Kirk and Spock go back in time to make a baldly allegorical point about American history. Which might be why I so enjoyed it, obvious flaws be damned. Romero's picture belongs to a stubbornly un-ironic tradition of transparent political commentary that's lost on modern audiences. At its best, the film feels like the work of a delirious, out-of-touch old man who nonetheless has a few things to say about where he thinks the world is headed. (At Kendall Square and available through On Demand.)

OPEN MARRIAGE

The New Pornographers play House of Blues on June 18.

Erica Henderson

A C NEWMAN CONCEIVED of the New Pornographers as a cool name before he hardly had any bandmates back in 1997. "In the beginning," Newman says, "it was like The Wizard of Oz, just collecting friends as you went along the yellow brick road."

Fellow singer/songwriter Dan Bejar from the group Destroyer and keyboardist Blaine Thurier were first aboard. Then alt-country siren Neko Case joined at the dawn of her solo career. "It wasn't like, 'Oh my God, I nabbed this secret-weapon star for our band,'" Newman says. "It was, 'My friend Neko's into it, too.'"

The Vancouver-bred outfit has since established an eight-piece core, completed by guitarist Todd Fancey, bassist John Collins, drummer Kurt Dahle and singer/keyboardist Kathryn Calder. Most of the members have other projects and now live in scattered locales.

"What keeps us together is that we're apart so much," 42-year-old Newman says from his current home in Woodstock, N.Y. "We're not really a full-time band."

In turn, schedule conflicts with Case and Bejar have made it difficult to get the full lineup on the road. The group didn't even play live without Case until Newman's niece Calder joined for 2005's Twin Cinema—and a promoter booked a show with the knowledge that Case couldn't make it. "We were shocked that the reaction was really good," Newman says. "It was like, 'Wow, we played without Neko and nobody pelted us with tomatoes!'"

That's not an issue this spring because the complete octet (Case and Bejar included) has committed to a North American jaunt that hits House of Blues on June 18, supporting the aptly titled new album Together. With the addition of touring cellist/saxophonist Ben Kalb, Newman adds, "We're as close as we've ever been to getting onstage and playing our records just like they are."

That's no easy feat given the cinematic breadth of the New Pornographers' evolved power-pop, which nods to everything from the British invasion to new wave, from folk to prog-rock.

"The idea was to take a lot of old rock 'n' roll tricks and co-opt them," says Newman, who plays a range of instruments, as does counterpoint Bejar. "Especially on the first one or two records, I was consciously singing 'Oh yeah' and 'C'mon' and 'Uh, huh,' and not because I was moved by the spirit."

In turn, the new CD moves from the ELO-meets-XTC "Crash Years" (iced with whistling) to Bejar's "Silver Jenny Dollar," which opens like Richard Thompson crossed with the Who. "I can't help but be influenced by the music I love," Newman says, listing both Black Sabbath and Abba in the Together blueprint. "When people say, 'I hear a lot of Beach Boys in your music,' I say, 'I love the Beach Boys. I suppose there'd be some in there.'"

Asked to single out a formative influence on his band, however, he cites the Dutch group Shocking Blue, not for its 1969 hit "Venus," but for obscure tunes like "Mighty Joe" and "Out of Sight, Out of Mind." "Those were real templates for our sound," says Newman, who devised a similar female/male vocal dynamic.

One thing he never did was write a song specifically for Case to sing—until the new "My Shepherd," which was inspired by the true story of a woman who took back her boyfriend after he served a prison term for blinding her with acid. "I wanted it to be this love-gone-wrong song, like an old Dionne Warwick or Dusty Springfield song," he says, "but to make the lyrics very dark."

More often, the New Pornographers blur the edges between lead and harmony vocals in sprawling arrangements that aren't sealed until the studio. "A lot of it is just winging it as we go," he says. "I always wanted it to be a strange mix of people.

"I like it when sometimes the verses are like a Rube Goldberg machine," Newman explains. "There's a bunch of things going off in different directions. Then you all come together in unison." ✖✖✖

String Theory The string rock quintet Darlingside kicks off its summer tour. The Williams College grads just released their first EP after being holed up in their Northampton home, which they describe as "reminiscent of the Grateful Dead's 710 Ashbury, except with less substance abuse and more granola." The group infuses its pop with the sounds of electric violin, mandolin, saz and cello. See Darlingside with Primate Fiasco and Mary Casiello at Church on June 11.

Simon Says

Nouveau Rich At 26, Simon Rich looks like he just celebrated his sweet 16. But looks can be deceiving. Rich, who graduated from Harvard in 2007 and now writes for Saturday Night Live, has already published two books. His newest is Elliot Allagash, a comic novel about a sinister prep-school student, who coaches a perpetual loner to popularity in exchange for his subservience. Nerdy melodrama or geeky memoir? Decide for yourself when Rich reads at Brookline Booksmith on June 16.

ATTENTION BOUNTY HUNTERS! BONUS POINTS TO ANYONE WHO CAN CAPTURE AN IMPROPER READER SPURRING HIMSELF ON AT THE "MAN VERSUS HORSE" MARATHON, HELD ON JUNE 12 IN LLANWRTYD WELLS, WALES

Unlike the rest of your friends, we want to see the photos from your next trip. Where did you take us? Send us a picture of you or a buddy, or better yet, someone famous reading THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN and tell us where you were. The wilder your destination and the more creative your photo, the better your chances of making the cut in the esteemed IMPROPER Sightings.

Leila Amerling (one of our 2010 bachelorettes) visited Hydra, Greece, where everyone kept asking if she had a spare $146 billion.

Ariel Zipkin and Marissa Goldstein attended the Belgrade Fair, where this Serbian official plied them with the local specialities of potted yeast and cabbage brandy.

While hiking in New Zealand, David Sullivan learned that, contrary to legend, there aren't sheep as far as the eye can see, it never rains sheep and only a few streets are actually paved with sheep.

Hieu Hoang and her husband, Louisiana congressman Anh "Joseph" Cao, are excited about the social realism in "Treme," but think that "True Blood" has played itself out.

Tired of online dating?

Meet Boston's most attractive & interesting... for dinner!

MOPSY

Table for Eight is a social introduction service.

Table for Eight replicates the way people used to meet by bringing people physically together to dine. Indeed, many members of this 20-year-old service are disillusioned on-line daters who are tired of the cat-and-clicking-mouse games of such contacts and their frequent deceptions. Table for Eight people span in age from late-20s to late-40s, with a smattering of baby boomers. Typical members have been busy cultivating their professional lives with an income averaging $73,000, perhaps figuratively married to their career but now considering the corporeal variation: 85 percent haven't been married yet and are childless. The actual table located at a restaurant like Sibling Rivalry, Cucci Cucci or Le Mistral – must be round, no harsh, excluding edges. This serendipity of strangers brought together has been compared to the gemütlich flavor of wedding reception dinners. You can dine with such scintillating types as physicians, lawyers, psychologists, and teachers and scientists from local prestigious universities. An initial phone interview involving 60 questions screens members and identifies interests, views and preferences. Although friendship and networking are benefits of dining with new people, Table for Eight also boasts at least 60 engagements, that they know of, that have resulted from their restaurant get-togethers in the last five years.

ART AND SOUL

Parting the Velvet Ropes

Anyone who calls Boston's social scene provincial has never been to the ICA's Spring Gala, which rivals the parties covered by the international gossip rags except that you don't get jet lag.

To honor the artist Dr. Lakra, whose work the ICA is showing, the museum commissioned him to design temporary tattoos. Although some guests had real ones, fashion pixie Mary Nobile-King decked herself and her gaggle of gay boys (yours truly included) in Chanel tattoos, complete with understated interlocking C's. Cocktails and dinner took place in an office building overlooking the harbor at sunset, with the light reflecting nicely off the likes of latter-day Frank Lloyd Wright Charles Renfro, über art collector Barbara Lloyd, the vastly entertaining Ofer Nemirovsky with the ever-lovely Shelly, mega-benefactors Fotene Demoulas and Tom Cote, Samson Projects wonder-couple Alexandra Cherubini and Camilo Alvarez, and oh-so-many equally glittery others. The live auction item was a Goyard handbag designed by Dr. Lakra, and it fetched $21K (perhaps because WBZ-TV's Lisa Hughes was modeling it). Afterward, there was an impromptu dance party on the way to the dance party, which was held on the harborside pavilion at the ICA, and provided an opportunity to see people like style-maker Jane Miller, British equestrian Paul Butterworth and the beyond fabulous Karen de Temple.

It also provided my favorite moment of the evening: VIPs had bracelets to enter through the back, and museum director Jill Medvedow forgot hers. After an awkward pause, someone said, "For Chrissakes, she runs the place," and the security guard wisely stepped aside.

Here's to the Ladies Who Lunch

Perhaps it was rebelling against tradition, or the threat of bad weather, that led many of the women to go hatless at a luncheon that usually resembles the Royal Enclosure at Ascot. Whatever the reason, the Emerald Necklace Conservancy's Party in the Park had decidedly less, and less elaborate, headgear this year. Of course, that made cheek-kissing much easier (who really wants a scratched cornea from saying hello?). Ditto for navigating the crowd with a glass of Champagne in a flower-bedecked tent on the Fenway, where the couture quotient was high and the estrogen level palpable due to stunning specimens like sexy do-gooder Corinne Grousbeck, the flawless Kristan Fletcher, fashion maven Katie Schuller Bleakie, arts patron Linda Cabot Black, nightlife czarina Kristina Lyons, and even a few pairs of socially prominent first and second wives—which was handled with ladylike diplomacy. For those who were drinking, the wine flowed freely. For those who were eating, the first two spa-cuisine courses were followed by a mango tart rich enough to justify seconds. For those who had to get back to the office, the coffee couldn't come fast enough. The top remarks:

"The baby came out 11 pounds, vaginal," to which someone else responded, "Was he carrying a briefcase?" And, speaking of the lack of hats, one iconoclastic Brahmin said, "I'm too short to wear one. They make me look like a mushroom."

As Seen on TV

What's Hot and Pink? Get your mind out of the gutter. It's a fund-raiser for the Breast Cancer Research Foundation, held at the Four Seasons and chaired by the likes of international Renaissance woman Evelyn Lauder, the home team's Stacey Lucchino, brunette bombshell Andrea Brooks, the swanlike Linda Waintrup, and purveyor of bubbles and baubles Elisha Daniels, along with honorees sneaker magnate Paul and Phyllis Fireman.

WCVB-TV's Kelley Tuthill did an excellent job of emcee'ing, while the Bristol Lounge did an outstanding job of accommodating the after-party. Which brings me to the party favor: a pink Snuggie. The event was so much fun, I spent the following day recovering, wearing it curled up in front of the TV.

Hear Her Roar

It was a major scheduling coup to get first ladies Diane Patrick and Angela Menino—along with such high-powered fellow honorees as harbor mistress Vivien Li, Red Sox brass Meg Vaillancourt, mega-philanthropist Barbara Lee, TV pocket pal and event emcee Janet Wu, to name only a few—in the same room at the same time. Throw in superstar Queen Latifah and you've got yourself a miracle. So it doesn't really matter if other things didn't go exactly as planned (like someone hijacking the microphone) when the Boston Women's Fund held their benefit at the Mandarin Oriental.

Just being in the same room as so many admirable and accomplished women was enough to make me want a sex change. Except, to paraphrase Queen Latifah, that would mean I'd be bitching about cramps every month. ×××
